CATRINE IN SORN, AND MAUCHLINE.

CATRINE, is a thriving manufacturing town, in the parish of Sorn, 72 miles W.S.W. of Edinburgh, 32 S. of Glasgow, 14 N.E. of Ayr, 12 S.W. of Kilmarnock, 5 N. from Old Cumnock, and 4 N. from Ochiltree; pleasantly situated nearly in the centre of the county, on the north bank of the river Ayr. This place has risen from insignificance to a considerable town. In 1787 its site contained only a blacksmith's shop and a meal mill. The cause of this rapid increase was the erection of cotton works by the late Claud Alexander, Esq., of Ballochmyle, who having acquired a large fortune in the East Indies, purchased the land for the purpose of establishing works thereon, by which he might increase the value of his property here. The business is now carried on by Messrs. James Finlay & Co. The machinery of the mills is driven by two large water wheels, which were erected by the late Sir William Fairbairn, of Manchester, in 1828. They are each 13 feet wide, and 50 feet in diameter. Both wheels work on the same shaft and have a power of 500 horses. These extensive works employ a large number of hands. There is a public library, the funds of which were raised by subscription; it contains about 6,000 volumes, and has upwards of 800 members. On the south side of the river Ayr are schools in the Elizabethan style, erected at a cost of £2,000. Sorn Castle, about a mile and a half from Catrine, once the seat of the Loudon family, is now the property and residence of James Somervell, Esq., J.P., who with Henry Farquhar, Esq., the heirs of Lady Boswell, and Major-General Sir Claud Alexander, Bart., are the principal heritors of the parish of Sorn, which abounds with coal, limestone and ironstone. Dugald Stewart, Esq., the late celebrated professor of moral philosophy in Edinburgh, was born in the neighbourhood of Catrine.

The parish of Sorn is bounded on the east by Muirkirk, on the south by Auchinleck, on the west by Mauchline, and on the north by Galloway and Strathaven; its form is nearly square, measuring about six and a half miles each way, and containing 19,195 acres. Formerly this parish formed part of the extensive one of Mauchline—the parish church standing about three miles distant from that village. The land, originally moor, has been much improved and well enclosed, and there are fine plantations near the Ayr, which river runs through the parish from east to west. Population of the parish in 1881, 4,255, and in 1891, 3,919, Catrine containing 2,458 of this number.

MAUCHLINE, a considerable town, and capital of its parish, is 2½ miles W. from Catrine, situated in a pleasant part of the county, and surrounded on all sides by a delightful country interspersed with several elegant mansions. In the manufacture of a beautiful description of fancy boxes, &c., in sycamore wood, tartan, &c., for which this town has long been noted, Messrs. W. & A. Smith have long enjoyed the patronage of royalty; whilst Messrs. Andrew Kay & Co., whose works are situate at the Haugh, have a world-wide reputation for the manufacture of their famous curling stones. The manufacture of chairs and cabinet goods, which is carried on by Mr. J. W. Connell, is also becoming an additional thriving industry. The buildings of the town are neat and possess an air of pleasing variety. Mauchline Castle is an ancient structure, well deserving the notice of the antiquarian. The parish school is well conducted and numerously attended. Burns resided several years at Mossiel, a small farm about half a mile to the north of Mauchline, on the left side of the road from thence to Kilmarnock. The steading may still be seen, environed by a few trees, as well as the fields, in traversing which, it is said, he composed some of his best poems. His chief resort when he visited Mauchline was the public house of John Dow—a thatched house of two flats, nearly opposite the churchyard gate, now entirely re-built and occupied as houses and shops. The cottage of "Poesie Nancy," or Mrs. Gibson, the scene of the "Jolly Beggars," stands more immediately opposite the church yard gate. Mauchline kirk, the scene of the "Holy Fair," was of the pure barn species. There is now an elegant church, in the Gothic style, with a steeple. In the cemetery may be seen the graves of the Rev. Mr. Auld, Nansie Tinnock, Mary Morrison, and several other persons who figure in the satires of Burns, and on the banks of the Ayr, at a short distance from Mauchline, is the scene of some of the bard's more pleasing poems—his lyrics particularly. Fairs are held first Thursday after the 4th February, first Wednesday after 18th May, fourth Wednesday in June, first Wednesday in August, the 26th of September, the 4th of November, and the fourth Wednesday in December. The parish contains 8,907 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 2,604, and in 1891, 2,339, of which number about 1,500 belong to the town.

CUMNOCK (NEW)

IS a parish of 48,096 acres, in the Kyle district. It was disjoined from Cumnock and formed into a separate parish about the year 1852. The village is about 45 miles S. of Glasgow, 21 S.E. of Kilmarnock, the same distance W. by S. of Ayr, 10 N. by E. of Dalmeilington, 12 W. by N. of Sanguhar, 24 N.W. of Thornhill, and 5 S.E. of Cumnock. The Glasgow and South-Western line of railway runs through the village, at which there is a station. The parish, which lies on the eastern boundary of that of Cumnock (or Old Cumnock), is in general hilly, and affords excellent pasture for sheep; but there are many spots of rich arable land. The river Nith takes its rise in the south-west end of the parish, and runs through the centre of the whole; and there are several small lakes, the sources of the Afton. Various mines of coal are worked in this neighbourhood, the property of William Hyslop, Esq., Lady Cathcart, &c. and limestone abounds in different parts of the district. The Bank of Scotland has a branch here. The church was erected in 1833; it is a neat and well-adapted building, sufficiently capacious for a congregation of 1,000 persons.

CUMNOCK (OLD) AND AUCHINLECK,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CRONBERRY, DARNCONNER, LUGAR, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMNOCK (or OLD CUMNOCK) is a considerable market and post town, in the parish of its name, 60 miles s.w. of Edinburgh, 16 E. of Ayr, and the same distance s.e. of Kilmarnock, situated on a line of road between Dumfries on the south-east and Glasgow on the north, 44 miles n.w. from the former town and 38 s. from the latter. It participates in the advantages of railway communication with all parts, the Glasgow and South-Western line having a station half a mile east, and the Ayr and Douglas line a station a quarter of a mile south of the town. The principal part of the town occupies the site of what was formerly the churchyard. The old churchyard at Barrhill, near the town, was at one period the place of execution, and contains the remains of three persons who were shot on the spot, in 1685, by a party of Highlanders, for their adherence to the covenanted work of reformation; and the corpse of Pagan, a martyr of the covenanted body, who died in the parish of Soron, was exhumed by a party of Dragoons, after being interred six weeks in the neighbouring churchyard of Auchinleck, and ignominiously buried at the gallows foot. In 1691 a fine monument of Aberdeen granite, 21 feet high, and of Gothic design, was erected to his memory, at an expense of £300. A cemetery was formed a few years ago a little to the south of the town, at a cost of about £1,000. The town, which is of an irregular triangle form, consists of a square and several streets, in which are a number of establishments in the various branches of the retail trade. It is situated in a deep sheltered hollow, at the confluence of the Glaisnock and Lugar waters. The manufacturing of various kinds of woollen fabrics, and wool spinning and dyeing have been introduced, and promise an important addition to the trade and industry of the place. Two engineering firms are actively engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements—Messrs. George McCartney & Co. having gained a degree of celebrity in the latter branch. Three banks are in operation, viz., a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, one of the Bank of Scotland, and one of the Royal Bank of Scotland; there is also a public library, established in 1792, by a company of shareholders. Baird's Institute, a commodious building erected in 1891, at an expenditure of close upon £3,000, was the generous gift of the late John Baird, Esq. of this town, who left ample funds for its construction and endowment. It contains a museum, billiard, reading and recreation rooms, &c.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free Church, one for the United Presbyterians, a chapel for Independents, one for the Baptists, and a Roman Catholic chapel, the cost of which was defrayed by the Marquis of Bute. In 1855 a handsome Town Hall was opened; it is erected in the Grecian style of architecture, from plans prepared by Mr. L. S. Ingram, of Kilmarnock, at a cost of nearly £8,000, towards which the Marquis of Bute contributed £500 and a free site. A few years ago the Marchioness of Bute built and furnished a hospital here at an expense of over £2,000; the whole cost being borne by her ladyship. Into this excellent institution the injured and the distressed of every religious creed are admitted with equal readiness. The sum of £20 annually, left for free education by the late Charles Dunnan, merchant, of London, a native of this parish, has, now, by the Commissioners of Endowments, been mostly applied to higher education in the public school, a commodious building erected at a cost of nearly £6,000. The castle of Tarrenzean, now in ruins, is in the neighbourhood; it gives the title of baron to the family of Dunfries. About two miles E. from Cumnock is the village of LUGAR. Here are situated the works of the Eglinton Iron Co., who have built for their workmen and their families numerous comfortable and neat cottages, forming a considerable village. There is also a Co-operative Society, established for the purpose of supplying all necessities to those who are employed by the Company, and there are also one or two other good shops and a corn mill. A handsome institute of stone, the gift of William Weir, Esq., was erected at Lugar in 1892. The building comprises billiard, card and recreation rooms, a large hall for public meetings, swimming and private baths, &c. The cost was about £5,000. The market at Cumnock is held on Thursday, and the fairs on the fourth Thursday after Candlemas, the Thursday after the 6th of March, the Wednesday after the 6th of June, the 18th of July, and the 27th of October. The parish of Old Cumnock comprises 14,140 acres. Population in 1881, 4,861, and in 1891, 4,718, of which number the town contained 3,105.

AUCHINLECK, signifying a field or rock, is a parish 18 miles in length by only about 2 in breadth, comprising 21,129 acres, watered on its northern extremity by the Ayr, and by the Lugar on the south. Coal and limestone are produced here, but the soil is for the most part rather unproductive. The village is situated somewhat above a mile N. from Old Cumnock, and about 3 from Son and Catrine. Close to the village is a station on the Glasgow and South-Western line of railway. There is an establishment here for the manufacture of snuff boxes. A public hall was erected in 1891 in celebration of Her Majesty's jubilee. The building is a neat structure, and was raised by subscriptions, aided by a bazaar promoted by the ladies of the district. The cost was about £1,100. The places of worship are an Established church, one belonging to a congregation of Original Seceders, and a chapel for Roman Catholics. At Birnie Knowe, about two miles from the village, the ruins of Auchinleck Castle stand in an angle formed by the Dippleburn and Lugar; and in the neighbourhood is the Place of Auchinleck, a handsome mansion, erected in the last century by Lord Auchinleck, senator of the college of justice, and father of the eminent and amiable James

Boswell, Esq., the friend and biographer of Johnson; the house is still the property of the Boswell family. A well attended fair for the sale of lambs is held annually on the last Tuesday in August. Population of the parish in 1881, 6,681, and in 1891, 6,202, of which number 1,489 belong to the village.

LUGAR, before mentioned, is situated in the above parish, as is also CRONBERRY and DARNCONNER, both populous mining villages, the former about one mile N.E. and the latter about 2 miles N.W. of Lugar. There are stations at the two former places on the Ayr, Mauchline and Muirkirk section of railway. Population in 1891: Lugar, 958 Cronberry, 928; Darnconner, 550.

IS a parish in the district of Carrick. The village is 93 miles s.w. of Edinburgh (through Maybole and Ayr), 47 s. by w. of Glasgow, 46 n.n.e. of Portpatrick, by the n.w. road (which is longer by three miles than along the coast), 15 s. by e. of Ayr, 8 s. from Maybole, and 6 n.n.e. from Girvan. The situation of this village is not exceeded by any in the county for beauty. It is seated in a fine fertile valley, near to the pellucid waters of the Girvan, which is fed by a number of small streams, some of them descending through deep and woody glens, admired for their picturesque and romantic loveliness; while the elegant mansions of the affluent that are interspersed throughout the district, and the hoary ruins of two ancient castles, contribute to the general interest of the scenery. The parish is about six miles in length by about five in breadth, and contains 17,962 acres. The uplands are bleak and pastoral, but the more level parts are well cultivated, enclosed and planted. Coal and limestone abound in several parts of the parish. The celebrated AILSA CRAIG is in the parish. The chief local proprietors are the Countess of Stair, Sir James Ferzuzson, Bart. M.P., of Kilkerran, and the trustees of F. T. R. Kennedy. Esq. The old parish church, dedicated to St. Michael, has fallen into decay; the present structure was erected in 1766. There are also a Free church, chapels for Evangelists, and Plymouth Brethren, and two Board schools in the parish. Population of the parish in 1831, 2,236; and in 1891, 1,830; and of the village, 556.

CRAIG MARK, WATERSIDE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DALMELLINGTON is a parish, about 10 miles in length by 3 in breadth, containing 17,788 acres. The town or village, a burgh of barony, is 72 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 49 s. of Glasgow, 42 n.w. of Dumfries, 24 s.e. of Kilmarnock, 15 s.e. of Ayr, 14 s. of Maybole, 12 s. of Old Cumnock, and 7 e. of Straiton. This thriving little place is pleasantly situated on the north bank of the water of Doon, and near to the base of an eminence, from the summit of which a fine view is obtained of a varied character, comprising rude and lofty mountains and the softer features of cultivation. Besides the trade enjoyed by the town, it derives some advantages from being the resort of parties of pleasure and for fishing. Those who wish to partake of the latter amusement will find on the banks of Loch Doon neat boats furnished by the proprietors of the inns at this place—the Black Bull, the Cross Keys, and the Eglington. The loch is a beautiful sheet of water, with a hard rocky shore extending eight miles in length and one in breadth, abounding with trout of fine flavour. On an island in the lake are the remains of Balloch Castle. Some years ago a fishing party discovered at the bottom of the loch what appeared to be boats, and, having obtained the necessary assistance, they succeeded in raising three canoes, the largest measuring 24 feet in length by four in breadth, hewn out of a solid log of oak. Two were much decayed, but the third was so little impaired as to allow of its being floated on the surface, with a person in it, for a considerable time; it is now preserved by Alexander F. McAdam, Esq., of Craigengillan, for the inspection of visitors. In Dalmeilington is a public library and a reading room well furnished with standard works, periodicals, and newspapers; a sum has been left in trust for the support of the latter, and for the education of a certain number of children. The railway station, which is situated in the village, is on the Ayr and Dalmeilington branch of the Glasgow and South Western lide. Situated about 5 miles N.W. of Dalmellington, on the road to Ayr, are the extensive Dalmellington iron works and collieries. There are eight blast furnaces. This company not only built the villages of CRAIG MARK and WATERSIDE, but also many other houses situate on LETHAN HILL, BURNFOOT HILL, BENWHAT, and KERSE. The village of Waterside, at which there is a station on the above-mentioned railway, is lighted by gas. The total population of their houses alone, which are occupied exclusively by their own workpeople and families, who occupy 800 houses, is upwards of 5,500. There are schools for the children of their workpeople at Craig Mark, Waterside, Kerse, Lethan Hill, and Benwhat, the one at Waterside being one of the finest private schools in the country. The company have stores for supplying the workpeople with the necessaries they require, they having been paid weekly for over 20 years. The places of worship are the Established and Free churches, the Evangelical Union chapel, and one for Roman Catholics. The school is under the management of the Board of Education building, built in 1875, to accommodate 270 scholars, and with the house for the schoolmaster, cost about £3,000. The parish of Dalmellington had in 1881 a population of 6,383, and in 1891, 5,300, the town containing 1,400.

DALRY AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

DALRY is a parish in the district of Cunninghame. The town is 69 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 25 (22 by rail) s.w. of Glasgow, 16 s.s.w. of Paisley, 5 s.w. of Beith, 4 n. of Kilmarnock, and 7 n. of Saltcoats; pleasantly situated on a rising ground, surrounded by the rivers Caaf, Rye and Garnock, which run in different directions near the village. The town consists of twelve streets, three of which diverge from a centre, forming a small square; many of the houses are well built, and the shops are neat. The town is lighted with gas, and supplied with gravitation water, at a cost of £10,500, capable of affording 130,000 gallons per day. There are three reservoirs in this parish, that at Camphill and Routenburn supplies Paisley; that at Munnock is for Irvine and district; and the one at Auld Muir for the town of Dalry. The sanitary arrangements are fully carried out by the County Council. A public park of about 20 acres, presented to the town by Mr. John Blair, w.s. Edinburgh, a native of the town, is now (1892) being laid out at a considerable expense, and includes skating and curling ponds. The branches of manufacture existing in the town and parish are those of worsted spinning (extensively carried on by Messrs. Biggart & Co. Limited, Bridgend Mills), and blanket and tweed manufacturing, by Messrs. Kyle, Aitken and Gardiner, at Ryeside Mills, also tweeds and hosiery by other firms.

The manufacture of wool may now be said to be the principal trade of this town. Two banks are established here, and lime, coal, and ironstone abound in the neighbourhood. One lime-stone quarry, at AUCHENS-KEITH, two miles from Dalry, has been reported by scientific men to be particularly rich in geological remains. There are several good hotels. Near to Dalry are extensive iron ore and coal mines belonging to the Eglinton Iron Co. and Messrs. Merry and Cuninghame. To the west is a beautiful natural cascade, which has a curious and singular appearance during the continuance of frost. In the centre of the town is a handsome granite fountain, presented by the late Thomas Biggart, Esq., of Baidland Hill, for the use of the inhabitants.

Two miles from Dalry is Blair House, an ancient pile of architecture, regarded as the oldest inhabited mansion in Scotland which has not been re-built, a portion of which retains the date of 1203, though the original tower even dates back to 1180. Both the exterior and interior are remarkable for their ancient appearance, and are in splendid preservation, the walls being of an extraordinary thickness. To facilitate communication from one part of the house to another, a passage four feet wide and thirty feet long was cut through a wall fourteen feet in thickness, and though the undertaking was refused by several contractors, was successfully executed under the direction of the late Captain W. F. Blair, R.N.; the present resident is Captain F. G. Blair, J.P., who courteously permits strangers to inspect the beautifully laid out grounds and his fine museum of foreign and British curiosities. Here is also a cave, evidently the work of nature, and well deserving the examination of visitors to this district. It is about 103 feet in length, and from 5 to 12 feet in height; the roof is encrusted with petrefactions, and over the entrance projects a vast rock, 30 feet by 27. The interior resembles Gothic arched work, and near the middle it expands into a spacious chamber, 35 feet long by 12 broad, and 12 feet in height. In former times popular superstition peopled it with elves; it accordingly received the appellation of "elf-houses;" in later days, under the arbitrary reign of Charles II., it afforded a refuge to the covenanters of this parish from the violence of their infuriated persecutors. This cave was supposed to have given refuge to Wallace after the burning of the "Barns of Ayr," and also his co-patriot Sir Bryce Blair, who was executed at Ayr by the English for the part he took with Wallace in the war of independence. The man who attended and supplied them with provisions was afterwards granted the farm, known by the name of "Wallace Faid" adjoining the cave, which remained in possession of his heirs until the end of last century. In Dalry parish is also Campbells and Routingsburn, where the Scottish army is said to have encamped previous to the battle of Largs, in 1263. Dalry bestows the title of Baron upon the eldest son of the Earl of Glasgow.

Among the places of worship is the Established church—rebuilt and considerably enlarged, at a cost of nearly £6,000. The style is Gothic, designed and superintended by Mr. David Thomson, architect, Glasgow. It is surmounted by a lofty spire, and altogether its general appearance is very attractive. This edifice contains four beautiful stained glass windows, which were made at the Royal factory at Munich. The principal one was presented by the late Captain Blair, R.N. of Blair; a second by Messrs. Baird & Co. of Glasgow; the third was the gift of the Misses Neil, of Swindridge Muir, in memory of their brother General Neil, who fell leading on his troops at the relief of Lucknow; and the fourth was presented by subscription from leading heritors of the parish. An auxiliary church of the Establishment, and Free, United Presbyterian, Episcopalian, and Roman Catholic churches are the other places of worship. A mission hall was opened in 1839. The building, which is of freestone, and favours the Gothic style of architecture, cost about £4,000, which was entirely defrayed by the late Rev. Robert Stevenson, D.D. of this town. There are several public schools, one of which, formerly the parochial school, but now known as the West End Public school, has been considerably enlarged, at a cost of £3,000, and will accommodate about 700 children. The weekly market is held on Thursday, and the annual fair on the last day of July. Acreage of parish, 19,231; population in 1881, 10,215, and in 1891, 8,151; of the latter number 3,667 were returned as belonging to the town.

GALSTON AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

GALSTON is a parish of 15,243 acres in the district of Kyle-Stewart. The town is eligibly situated on the left bank of the Irvine, on the road from Edinburgh to Ayr, and from Dumfries to Glasgow; it is 22 s. from the latter city, 16 N.N.E. from Ayr, and 5 E. from Kilmarnock; seated in a hollow, sheltered on all sides by rising grounds. The industrious classes are chiefly employed in weaving and the manufacture of lace. There is a corn mill, and one for paper mill boards—the latter erected early in the fifteenth century. Another occupation which offers itself to the labouring classes is that of raising coal, of which a large quantity is obtained from the estates of the Duke of Portland, who is superior of the parish. There are excellent schools. Blair's school opened in 1811, under the will of the late Charles Blair, Esq., of Galston, who bequeathed certain heritable property, which was to accumulate until the income amounted to £200 per annum, has under the Endowment Act now become incorporated with the public schools. There are likewise four sabbath evening schools, wherein upwards of 500 children receive instruction. There is an excellent institution, which was erected in 1874, at a cost of over £3,000, given by Miss Brown, of Lanfine, and is called Brown's Institute. It consists of a spacious reading room, well supplied with the daily newspapers, periodicals, &c.; a library, containing between 2,000 and 3,000 volumes; and recreation rooms for various kinds of amusement.

The places of worship are an Established church, an Evangelical Union chapel, and a United Presbyterian church, of Gothic architecture, which cost about £1,100. The Roman Catholics have a beautiful place of worship, dedicated to St. Sophia, which was opened in December, 1886. The style of architecture is strictly Byzantine,

Dr. R. Rowland Anderson, of Edinburgh, being the architect. This edifice was the munificent gift of Lord Bute, and cost upwards of £10,000. For the Free Church congregation a neat structure, built of red sandstone, with a Gothic front, was erected in 1888, the cost, amounting to about £2,500, being defrayed partly by subscription and partly by a grant from the Ferguson Bequest fund. The architect was Mr. J. B. Wilson, of Glasgow. The parish extends about 13 miles in length, by four to five in breadth, lying in the upper part of the county, contiguous to Lanarkshire, and separated by the Irvine from the parish of Loudoun on the north, Mauchline and Sorra bounding it on the south. The surface is diversified with hills, but the land is generally arable, and there is a considerable quantity of wood. The district is watered by some small tributaries of the Irvine and the river Avon, which rise in the upper part of the parish. About a mile from the town is Loudoun Castle, a large and magnificent structure in the modern castellated style; this, together with the old castle of Cessnock and Barr, surrounded as they are by natural and artificial woods, highly enhance the beauty of the district, in which is also Patie's Mill, celebrated in the delightful song called "The Lass of Patie's Mill." The annual fairs are held on the third Thursday in April, the first Thursday in June, and the last Wednesday in November. Population of the parish in 1881, 5,961, and in 1891, 6,404, of which number the town contained 3,845.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,
ON THE GLASGOW AND SOUTH-WESTERN LINE.
Station, contiguous to the town—John Alcorn, collector

GIRVAN AND NEIGHBOURHOOD,

GIRVAN is a parish of 14,580 acres, in the district of Carrick. The town, a burgh of barony, is 90 miles W.S.W. of Edinburgh, 56 S.W. of Glasgow, 85 N.W. of Portpatrick, 31 N.E. of Stranraer, 21 S. by W. of Ayr, 13 N. by E. of Ballantrae, 12 S.S.W. of Maybole, and 6 S.W. of Daily, situated on the left bank of the Garvan or Girvan, near to its influx with the sea, and at a point exactly opposite the islet called ALISA CRAIG. This rock, which is 11 miles distant, rises out of the Fifth of Clyde, to the height of 1,075 feet. It is two and a half miles in circumference, and the top, which is conical, is covered with a luxuriant crop of heath, grass, ferns, and other plants, which feed great numbers of goats and rabbits. All around, on the precipitous sides of the rock, uniformly nestle almost inconceivable numbers of solan geese, puffins and gannets, which flutter about, and produce an incessant deafening noise. On a long terrace, or shoulder, of the Craig, at the elevation of 200 feet from the base, stands a deserted square tower, or castellated house, still very perfect as a ruin. Higher up issue two sparkling and beautiful springs of water, one of which forms a marshy plain, covered with various plants, amongst others the hydrocotyle vulgaris, of extraordinary magnitude. The rock (which is in the parish of Daily) belongs to the Marquis of Ailsa, who draws from it a yearly rental of £30, which is paid by the feathers of the fowls and the rabbit skins. Naturalists and botanists would find a visit of value, in increasing their knowledge of the vegetable world. The harbour of Girvan, which underwent considerable improvements in 1869-70, and still further and more extensive in 1881-83, at the expense of the Harbour Commissioners, is now considered safe and convenient for shipping. Large quantities of grain of various kinds are annually exported hence, chiefly to Liverpool and Glasgow. The steamer "Loch Etive" carries goods to and from Glasgow weekly. The trade in coal and lime is important—the mines of the former and the quarries of the latter being numerous in the neighbourhood. Formerly the chief business of the town consisted in the manufacture of a variety of cotton and woollen goods for the Glasgow and Paisley markets, which then afforded employment to the bulk of the inhabitants; the principal trade of the place now is herring fishing, which occurs twice a year, beginning in December and May. The government of the town is vested in two bailies and twelve councillors, three of the latter being chosen annually, on the retirement or otherwise of the like number on the 12th of October; the Contess of Stair is the superiress of the burgh. Girvan is a station on the Ayr, Maybole and Girvan branch of the Glasgow and South-Western railway. In October, 1871, a line of railway was commenced, called the Girvan and Portpatrick line. It is 31½ miles in length, and was opened in 1876, and greatly facilitates commerce between Glasgow and the North of Ireland.

The places of worship are as follows, viz.—Two churches of the Establishment, one for United Presbyterians, a Free church, and one each for Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, and Wesleyan Methodists. The Episcopalian church is a neat structure of Gothic architecture, the interior being beautifully decorated; it has also a very commanding pulpit, and was erected at a cost of £1,100. The M'Kechnie Institute, erected at the corner of Dalrymple street and Ailsa street, was the gift of the late Mr. Thomas M'Kechnie, in memory of his deceased brother, R. M'Kechnie, and himself. The building, which consists of library, ladies' and gentlemen's reading rooms, smoking and committee rooms, is of red sandstone from the famous Ballochmyle Quarries, the architects being Messrs. M'Kiesnick and Rowan, of Glasgow. It was completed in July, 1883, the cost being about £3,000. To the parochial school, which is now under a parish School Board, a valuable donation was made by the late Mrs. Crawford, of Ardmillan, who left the interest of £1,000 for ever to the teachers, for the education of forty children, subject only to the deduction of two guineas, to be distributed in small prizes amongst the pupils. The same munificent lady left also the interest of £1,000, of which £12 is given to the precentor of the church, for the instruction of ten of the children in sacred music, and the balance to be divided among the poor house-holders not receiving parochial relief. There are also two other schools here under the burgh School Board, one of which was built in 1875, at a cost of £3,500, for 550 scholars. A market, chiefly for grain, is held on Monday; and the fairs are on the first Mondays in April and October, for stock, hiring servants, and general business. Population of Girvan in 1881, 4,505, and in 1891, 3,507, and of the parish, 4,906.

IRVINE,

WITH THE PARISH OF DREGHORN AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

IRVINE, the most ancient royal burgh in Scotland, is the seat of a presbytery, and as regards population and importance, the second town in the district of Cunningham. Irvine at one time was the chief port of the Clyde, and previous to 1760 had a full customs establishment, with jurisdiction from Troon to Largs and round Arran, and had more vessels than any other port in Scotland, with the exception of Leith and the upper Clyde ports, then all comprised in port Glasgow. So recently as about 1860 Troon and Ardassan were sub-ports under this town, an application recently made by the Harbour Trustees to have Irvine reinstated to the position of a port of the United Kingdom has been granted, and a Treasury warrant is about to be issued for that purpose. The town is agreeably situated on rising ground on the north bank of the river Irvine, about a mile from its junction with the Garnock water and the sea, and upon the line of the Glasgow and South-Western railway. A new station on the Caledonian railway was opened in June, 1890, which joins the main line to Glasgow. It is distant from Edinburgh 87 miles w.s.w., 25 s.s.w. of Glasgow, 11 n. of Ayr, 11 s. of Beith, and 7 w. of Kilmarnock. Irvine unites with Ayr, and with Campbelltown, Inverary and Oban in Argyleshire, in returning one member to Parliament, who is styled the member for the Ayr Burghs. The burgh is governed by a provost, four bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer, and eleven councillors. A bailie court is held every lawful day, as business may require; and one for the recovery of small debts and for the trial of criminal cases before the justices is also held every Monday. The Dean of Guild Court is held on Tuesday.
A sheriff court is held every alternate month. There are several commodious inns, amongst which may be named the King's Arms and the Eglinton Arms, High street. The market is held on Monday, and the fairs on the first Tuesday in May, and on the third Monday in August commences the Marymass fair. The Marymass races are held on the Saturday following the third Monday of August, and the Eglinton Hunt Meeting (over Bogside course) generally in the beginning of April. The Town Moor and the Links at Bogside, and at Gailies, which are adjacent to the town, form excellent sites for military encampments, the 4th Battalion Argyle and Sutherland Highlanders (Renfrew Militia) having for many years chosen the Town Moor for the annual training, extending over three months in summer. Detachments of the Royal Horse Artillery from time to time also encamp on the moor. At Bogside, on the Eglinton Estate and adjoining the moor, the Lanarkshire and the West of Scotland Artillery Volunteers have camps of instruction during the summer.

There is a splendid land range here with a battery of 5 pieces, called Fort Eglinton. The question as to whether Irvine or Barry, on the east coast of Scotland, should be selected as the site for the Scottish National Camp of Instruction for Artillery Volunteers, has recently agitated the Artillery Volunteer regiments in Scotland, but it is now understood that the authorities have completed negotiations and selected Barry. The camping ground at Gailies, which is on the Duke of Rutland's estate, lies along the beach between Irvine and Troon, and has been selected by the Glasgow Volunteer Brigade.
In 1891 there were between 4,000 and 5,000 volunteers in camp, and there is ample scope for exercising such a large body of volunteers.
The Ayrshire Volunteers also occupy this ground throughout the summer months. Eglinton Castle, the seat of the Earl of Eglinton and Winton, stands within two miles of the burgh, and is famous in connection with the grand tournament held here in 1839. The noble Earl permits the greatest freedom of access to the grounds and gardens; admission, however, is only obtainable by ticket, which may be had from Mr. C. Murchland, publisher, Irvine.

The situation of the town is dry and healthy, being altogether of a sandy bottom. All the streets are broad and airy. The old steeple, with court house, council chambers, and gaol, that occupied the centre of the main street, have been removed. The municipal buildings, including council chambers, court house, &c. erected from a beautiful design, form an elegant structure, and are much admired. The parish church is a building of large dimensions, with a spire and clock, and stands on rising ground in the centre of the churchyard. The other places of worship are a Free church, two for United Presbyterians, one for Roman Catholics, and one for Baptists all situated in the burgh proper. At the north end of the town an academy, surrounded by extensive play-grounds, was erected in 1814, at an expense of £2,250, of which sum the burgh paid £1,633, and the remainder was made up by public subscription. A royal charter was obtained for the proper establishment and government of this institution, which is an honour and ornament to Irvine. Many valuable prizes are awarded at the annual examinations; and some years ago a sum of £1,000 was left to this institution by John Ferguson, Esq., of Cairnbrock, the interest of which is proposed to be given annually in bursaries, at the disposal of his trustees. There are also public, Roman Catholic and Board schools; a Literary and Social Institute, well provided with reading and recreation rooms, and a large hall for public meetings and entertainments. The Templars' Hall here was the first erection of its kind in Scotland; there is also an Orange and Protestant Hall. The other principal erections are the Royal, Clydesdale, British Linen, and Union Banks, all handsome architectural buildings. The grain stores of J. F. Longmuir & Co. are extensive and substantial structures, and are, perhaps, the largest in Cunninghame. Coal pits have been successfully sunk in the burgh land.

On the south side of the river, but connected with the town by a fine stone bridge of four arches, is an extensive suburb called FULLARTON, but in the parish of Dundonald. It abuts on the Frith of Clyde, and includes the harbour and quay, and contains a ship-building yard, three steam saw mills, naphtha works, two iron forges, and two large engineering and foundry yards. Four large chemical and chrome works have been erected near the beach, which give employment to nearly 1,000 men. The British Dynamite Co. (now Nobel's Explosives Co. Limited), have also erected works on the north side of the river. The harbour has been much improved, at very considerable expense, and the trade has in consequence greatly increased, especially in the export of coal. The places of worship in Fullarton district of the burgh are the Free and Established churches. In 1881 an Act of Parliament was obtained for extending the boundaries of the burgh, and for other purposes. By this act Fullarton, sometimes called the Halfway, was amalgamated with the burgh, so that the whole town is now under the jurisdiction of the municipality. Some years ago the local authorities of the burgh of Irvine and the parish of Dundonald combined in promoting a scheme for supplying the town with gravitation water, and in August, 1878, the water was introduced. Arrangements have since been made for giving supplies of water to the towns of Kilwinning, Stevenston and Saltcoats, from the Irvine Water Works, which were, by the Irvine Burgh Act, 1881, transferred to the Corporation. Upwards of £90,000 has been expended on their construction.

Irvine is a burgh of great antiquity; the beginning of Irvine is the very beginning of history. Before Robert the Bruce was, before Sir William Wallace was, during the time of William the Lion, it is supposed that there was a "town" called Irvine. The earliest mention of Irvine is contained in the account of a dispute between Sir Ralph de Eglinton and the town of Irvine, and somewhere towards the close of the twelfth century a charter was given to it. During the time of Alexander II. a charter existed, which was confirmed by Robert the Bruce. From another similar document it appears the burgesses were in possession of the entire barony of Cunninghame and Largs. The first great event in its history was the foundation of the convent or monastery of the Carmelites, about 1300. The sect of the Buchanites had also its origin in Irvine; and it is recorded that in 1638 four women were executed in one day, and in the month of March, 1640, there were twelve women executed in Irvine for the crime of witchcraft, and fifty years afterwards one woman was severely punished for acting as a spawifor for the recovery of stolen goods. From 1618 to 1640 Irvine was the scene of the labours of David Dickson, the minister who connected Glasgow with Irvine, eminent as a divine, and author of a poem that moved life in the memory of religious men. He left Irvine to fill the office of principal of Glasgow University. Some years ago the manse he occupied at Perth (corner of Kirk vennel) was taken down in the course of street improvements. On the 31st December, 1666, Blackwood and McCoil, two covenanted, were hanged at Irvine for being at Pentland. William Sutherland, the langman of Irvine, refused to execute these men. Irvine is also the birthplace of James Montgomery, author of "The World before the Flood," &c., but more widely known as the author of the hymn commencing "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire," and many other sacred poems; he is generally styled "the Christian Poet." He was born 4th November, 1771, in a little back dwelling still standing in the street leading to the railway station. This property was some time ago purchased by some enthusiastic members of the Irvine Burns club with the view of preserving it. A tablet has been placed on the building, marking it as the birthplace of Montgomery. In 1841 he visited his native town, and was received with every mark of respect. In this town Burns, Scotland's national poet, served his time as a flax dresser, and the house in which he wrote, and was burnt out of, is still pointed out to strangers. John Galt, author of the "Annals of the Parish," &c., was born at Irvine, on 2nd of May, 1779; the house then occupied by his father's family was taken down in 1858 and the office of the Union Bank erected on its site; a neat tablet in the Bank office commemorates this circumstance. Here was invented the screw propeller so early as 1824 or 1825, by Messrs. W. McCrick, Maxwell Dick, and James Steadman. Population of the town in 1881, 8,517, and in 1891, 9,087.

DREGHORN is a parish situated about 2½ miles E. from Irvine, and about 4 from Kilmarnock. There are extensive coal mines and fire clay and brick works in the neighbourhood. SPRINGSIDE is a small village in this parish, which has a station on the G. and S.W. line. There are two Board schools, an Established and a Free church, and an Evangelical Union chapel. Population of the parish in 1881, 3,949, and in 1891, 4,057.

KILBIRNIE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

KILBIRNIE, or KILBURNIE, is a populous village in that parish, district of Cunningham, 61 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 20 s.s.w. of Glasgow, the like distance N. of Ayr, and 3 w. from Beith; elegantly situated on the banks of the Garroch, in the heart of a fine country, and within a mile of the loch of Kilbirnie, which extends two miles in length by half a mile in breadth. The importance of this village has been greatly augmented by the flax spinning, linen thread, and fishing-not works of Messrs. W. & J. Knox. A branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, is established here. Glengarnock Iron and Steel Works is an extensive concern for the manufacture of pig iron and basic steel, situated about a mile and a quarter to the south-east of Kilbirnie. These works employ about 2,000 persons, including those engaged in raising coal for the use of the furnaces. The workmen in about a newly erected village, and are well supplied with the necessaries required from a store, at market prices. A large number of hands are also employed at the factory of Messrs. Paton, Brown & Co., near to the Kilbirnie railway station, manufacturers of flannel shirts, skirts, &c. Kilbirnie is also noted for its manufacture of fishing-nets, by machinery, six firms being now engaged in this trade. There are also two rope works, belonging respectively to Messrs. Robertson & Riddet, and J. Watt & Co. Glengarnock and Kilbirnie station on the Glasgow and South-Western line is situated near to the former place and about a mile and a quarter from Kilbirnie; there are likewise stations at the first-named village and at Bridgend, Kilbirnie, both on the Caledonian line.

The old castle of Glengarnock is perhaps one of the most ancient, as well as the most stately, ruins in Ayrshire. It is supposed to have been the residence of the once famed family of De Morville, which flourished in great splendour during the reigns of Alexander I., David I., Malcolm IV., and William the Lion. They held the high office of constable of Scotland, and were lords of Galloway and Cunningham. There likewise exist the extensive ruins of the old house of Kilbirnie, long the residence of the ancient family of Crawford of Kilbirnie. At the present time, the estates of Kilbirnie are principally possessed by the Knox family. The parish church is a plain edifice, possessing no architectural features of importance. The chief interest attaching to the building is found in the elaborate carvings in wood with which portions of its interior are ornamented. The gallery in the Crawford aisle, in particular, is a perfect mass of beautiful carved work, reflecting great credit on the artist who designed it. It is supposed to have been executed by the orders of John, first Viscount Garnock, the escutcheon of whose arms, impaled with those of his wife Margaret (only daughter of John, first Earl of Bute), accompanied by sixteen other coats of arms, being those of his ancestors in the fourth degree, appear along its front. The gallery had been allowed to fall into a state of neglect and decay; but Mr. James Knox, the owner of Kilbirnie Castle, had it thoroughly restored in excellent taste, and it is now likely to remain an ornament to the church for many years. The most interesting object in the church yard is the stately tomb which forms the last resting place of the gallant Captain Thomas Crawford, of Jordanhill, whose capture of Dumbarton Castle, in 1571, is one of the most daring feats recorded in history. Congregations of the Free Church (East and West), United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics, have likewise their respective temples for worship. The town possesses a cemetery covering two acres, laid out at a cost of £900. The parish of Kilbirnie comprises 10,335 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 5,243 persons, and in 1891, 5,469; of this number the village contained 3,557

KILMARNOCK,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF CROOKEDHOLM, CROSSHOUSE, RICCARTON, HURLFORD, KILMAURS, FENWICK (or FINNICK—HIGH AND LOW), CRAIGIE, GATEHEAD, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILMARNOCK is a large and important manufacturing town in the parish of that name and district of Cunningham, 65½ miles s.w. of Edinburgh (through Glasgow), 21 s.w. from Glasgow, 13 s. by r. from Ayr, and between 6 and 7 s. by r. from Irvine; situated on level ground near the confluence of the Kilmarnock water with the Irvine. Two centuries ago this now thriving and populous town was a mere hamlet, dependent upon the baronial castle in its neighbourhood. The chief advantages of the place as a site for manufactures was the presence of coal, and for many years it seems to have been distinguished only for the production of Scotch bonnets and military caps. In 1731 the population had so increased that a new parish, the High Church, was formed. Subsequently, and for a considerable period, the staple manufacture was that of carpets, and in this branch it yet stands pre-eminent. The leading kinds are two-ply, three-ply and Brussels. A Kilmarnock mechanic had the honour of being the discoverer of the three-ply carpets; they excel the two-ply in design, colour, and durability. Steam is now used by most firms for the weaving of two-ply and Brussels. An extensive trade is carried on in the manufacture of shoes for exportation. Formerly skin works and tanneries were common in Kilmarnock, but at the present time there is only one of each. Of late years an extensive trade in the manufacture of tweeds and wineys has been developed, and woollen and worsted spinning is also carried on. The iron trade may now be said to be the staple trade of the town, and there are many large machine making and iron founding establishments. The most extensive of these are the Caledonian Works, carried on by Messrs. Andrew Barclay, Son & Co., the Glenfield, the Vulcan, Messrs. McCulloch; the Townholm, Messrs. Grant, Ritchie & Co.; and others. The Townholm Forge, of which Messrs. M. Reid & Co. are the proprietors, is famous for the size and excellence of its forgings. The wages paid in this branch of manufacture amount to several thousand pounds weekly. Shawl printing was formerly the most important department of manufacture. It has almost disappeared, and there are now only two small works engaged in it. The manufacture of cotton and other goods by steam power has been in operation for some years, and gives employment to several hundred females. There is also a large establishment for the manufacture of a patented water meter, invented by an ingenious townsman, Mr. Thomas Kennedy. The importance of Kilmarnock has been much increased by a large engineering establishment in connection with the Glasgow and South-Western railway, for the manufacture and repair of locomotive engines, carriages, and other apparatus. The banking establishments are branches of the Bank of Scotland, the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the British Linen Company, together with a local bank for savings, apart from the one in connection with the post office. Surrounding the town are extensive coal fields, from which fuel is obtained for the works of Kilmarnock, besides large supplies being transmitted continually by railway to Ardrossan, Ayr, Troon, and Irvine, where it is shipped to various places.

The civil government is vested in a provost, six bailies, and eighteen councillors. The magistrates preside in the criminal court by turns, and the justices sit monthly. This town joins with Dumbarton, Port Glasgow, Renfrew, and Rutherglen in returning one member to Parliament. The Dowager Lady Howard de Walden, only surviving sister of the late Duke of Portland, is the principal owner of Kilmarnock and its neighbouring lands. Few towns can boast of a larger and finer cross, where no fewer than seven streets converge. They are regularly laid out, and the greater part of the houses are built of stone. The opening up of such new streets as John Finnie street, in which is the post office, Duke street, and John Dickie street, have done much to improve the general appearance of the town, as well as to promote sanitary purposes. The Liberals and Conservatives have each a club house, the former being situated in Portland street, whilst that of the latter is in Sturrock street. This is a fine stone building in the Italian style of architecture, and consists of a spacious hall, to accommodate 400 people, and billiard, reading and recreation rooms. Members are admitted to full use of the rooms for the small sum of one shilling per year. The building was erected by public subscription at a cost of about £1,400, the architect being Mr. R. S. Ingram. The suburbs contain many handsome villas, occupied by business men or retired merchants. The Town House, built in 1805, contains a court room for the magistracy, and public offices. The Court House in St. Marrock street, erected in 1852, is an elegant structure, attached to which are the sheriff's chambers and the offices of the procurator fiscal. The Corn Exchange buildings comprise a large public hall, erected by an influential joint-stock company. At the junction of John Finnie and John Dickie streets is a range of buildings belonging to and occupied by the Kilmarnock Equitable Co-operative Society, and built at a cost of £6,000. The Kilmarnock Academy is a handsome and commodious structure, worthy of the town and highly creditable to the architect, Mr. William Raitton. It is built of red sandstone, in the Gothic style of architecture of the Elizabethan period, and is designed to accommodate 600 pupils, boys and girls, where they are taught various branches of education by able masters. Dr. Hugh Dickie, B.A., LL.D. is the rector. It was erected by the burgh School Board, at a cost of £5,000, and was opened in June, 1876. There are also two well-built and commodious elementary schools in High street and Low Glencairn street, also erected by the School Board. What was formerly the Free school has been converted by the Board into a Grammar school, and the Female Industrial school is now an elementary school of the Board. There are also several private schools of a high character. In addition to these are Kay's Endowed schools, in Wellington street and Bentinck street, founded by Alexander Kay, a native of Kilmarnock, who left the sum of £6,000 for their building and endowment. These schools have by the Endowment Commissioners' scheme been sold to the School Board, and the interest of the proceeds applied to educational purposes. Two School Boards have been elected here—the Burgh School Board and the Landward School Board, and all public schools within the burgh are under the supervision of the former, and those outside the boundaries of the burgh under the latter. The institutions likewise comprise some well conducted societies. The most important is the Kilmarnock Library, founded in 1797. At present, including the Shaw and Philosophical libraries now amalgamated with it, there are 7,328 separate works, with upwards of 20,000 volumes. By a bequest from the late Mr. Crawford, bookseller, a free income of fully £100 annually has become available for the purchase of books. The Philosophical Society was formed in 1828, for the promotion of general and specially scientific knowledge. There is an excellent reading room in the Ossington Coffee House, built by Lady Ossington, former proprietor of the Barony of Kilmarnock, who also bequeathed the sum of £3,000 for the endowment of the institution, which came into the management of trustees for the community at her death. This room is liberally supplied with newspapers, magazines, and other periodicals. Another institution worthy of notice is the Kilmarnock Philharmonic Society. Besides these, there are located here four masonic lodges, a society of the Independent Order of Oddfellows, one of the Free Foresters, one of the Free Gardeners, and others. An object of interest in this town is the Observatory, erected in 1818, by the late Mr. Thomas Morton, at an expense of £1,000. The Observatory, which is 70 feet in height, and furnished with valuable telescopes and other apparatus, stands on a fine site, and commands a delightful view of the surrounding country as far as the Firth of Clyde. Mr. Morton obtained considerable celebrity for his mechanical genius, and in 1855 he was elected a member of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1818 was inaugurated in the market cross a beautiful monument to the memory of Sir James Shaw, Bart., late Lord Mayor of London, who was a native of Mosshead, in this neighbourhood, where he was born in 1764, and died on the 22nd October, 1843. The statue of the deceased, by Filkins, is eight feet in height, mounted on a pedestal of the same altitude. The former, which is cut out of a solid block of marble, weighing ten tons, represents him in his civic decoration as lord mayor, and is altogether a very fine production of art.

The Kay Park owes its existence to the late Alexander Kay, insurance broker, Glasgow, a native of Kilmarnock, who died in January, 1866. By his will, bequeathed £6,000 for the building and endowment of two elementary schools for the children of industrious poor, he left £10,000 to purchase grounds for a public park and to maintain the same. After several attempts to obtain suitable ground, the trustees gave up their endeavours, and the money was allowed to accumulate. In 1878 the late Duke of Portland intimated his willingness to deal with the trustees for the purchase of ground for a public park, whose capital was then about £13,000. After negotiations, the present site of the park was fixed, which consists of nearly forty acres. The cost of the ground alone was £9,000. It includes the Clerk's Holm, and stretches from Braehead House to the Townhead bridge, and from the river on the west to Grassyards road on the east. Nearly a fourth of it is reserved as feuing ground. A large portion of the money was spent in laying out the park and forming drives and walks, so that when the trustees handed it over to the council little more than £1,000 remained as a fund to maintain it. In the centre of the Clerk's Holm is an ornamental fountain, the gift of the late Mrs. Crooks, which cost £800. In the same place a band-stand has been erected, for music on Saturday afternoons. On August 9th, 1879, the park was publicly handed over to the council, in behoof of the town, by the trustees, the council undertaking, if necessary, to provide £100 yearly. In 1882 the town council purchased Strawberry Bank, an adjoining property, consisting of eight acres, for £1,800, which has been incorporated with the Kay Park. A portion is reserved for feuing purposes, and a small ornamental lake is formed on the south-east of the ground. In this section of the park a handsome monument has been erected in honour of the pioneers of parliamentary reform, which was inaugurated by Lord Rosebery. In connection with Kay Park may also be noticed the Burns' Monument, said to be one of the finest to the memory of the Bard in Scotland. The monument was originated at the public anniversary of Burns, held on January 26th, 1877, when a proposal to erect a statue in honour of the poet was agreed to, and a committee appointed to carry out the project. In a short time £1,000 was subscribed, and this before long was doubled. Instead of a simple statue the committee found they could erect a monument and statue therein. By the kindness of the Kay Trustees a site for the monument was granted in a most eligible situation in the park. The erection is in the Scottish baronial style, from a design by Mr. Ingram, architect, Kilmarnock, and has a height of 80 feet. It overlooks the whole town, and commands one of the finest possible views. The memorial stone was laid with masonic honours on September 14th, 1878, and on August 9th, 1879, the whole was completed. The statue, which is of Sicilian marble, was executed by Mr. W. G. Stevenson, Edinburgh, and cost £800. It is reckoned an excellent likeness of the poet. R. W. Cochran-Patrick, Esq., M.P. for North Ayrshire, laid the memorial stone, and Major-General C. Alexander, M.P. for South Ayrshire, unveiled the statue, which is placed in an alcove at the top of the entrance stair. The entire cost of the building and statue was about £2,700 the whole being raised by subscription, and both were handed over to the council for the community free of debt. Part of the building is used as a Burns' and Archaeological Museum. The collection of Burns' holograph MSS. in this monument is the most complete in existence, and more may be seen by a single visit to it than in all other Burns' collections put together. It includes the MSS. of "Tam o' Shanter," "Cottar's Saturday Night," "The Twa Dogs," "The Author's Earnest Cry and Prayer," "Address to the Deil," "Winter: a Dirge," "Auld Farmer's Address to his Mare," "Hallow'een," "Holy Fair," "John Barleycorn," "Man was made to Mourn," "Address to James Smith," "Epistle to Davie, a brither poet," "Death of Puir Maillie," "Puir Maillie's Elegy," "Scotch Drink," "Last May a braw Woer," "Holy Willie's Prayer," "Lassie with the lint White Locks;" &c. and many letters from Burns to his correspondents in Kilmarnock, and neighbourhood. There is also the Mackie Library, which contains almost every published edition of the poet (including the first Kilmarnock edition, 1786), comprising upwards of 800 volumes.

The Buchanan Bequest is the most important charitable institution. In 1875 the last survivor of the Misses Buchanan, of Bellfield, died, and according to settlement made by the three sisters, the mansion and estate of Bellfield was gifted to the town of Kilmarnock and the village of Riccarton, close to which the estate, which consists of 240 acres, is situated. The following digest of the trust deed fully explains its nature. The lands and estate of Bellfield and the minerals were to be held by trustees till Martinmas, 1885, and the trust called the Buchanan Bequest. The annual proceeds are to defray expenses of the bequest, to pay yearly at Martinmas £5 to the Certified Industrial Schools; £3 to Kilmarnock Infirmary; £10 to the parish minister of Riccarton, to be expended on flannel for deserving poor; £130 yearly as salary to a missionary for Riccarton parish, and the balance of the yearly rents from lands and minerals to accumulate. As soon as convenient, part of the mansion to be fitted up as a library, and open for consultation and reference only to the public of Kilmarnock and Riccarton, and the gardens and policies to be open for recreation. Out of the accumulated funds, and before ten years, the rest of the mansion to be fitted up as an asylum for aged and infirm people, not on the poor roll, who are to be sixty years old and upwards, or younger if rendered unable by accident to provide for themselves, and resident for ten years in Kilmarnock or Riccarton parish. The inmates are to be clothed and fed, and all charges paid out of the rents; but a sum must be available yearly for equal division between Kilmarnock and Riccarton for charitable purposes. The trustees have power to abandon the asylum part of the bequest, should they think the revenues not sufficient, and they have decided to do so. The balance remaining for division between the parishes of Kilmarnock and Riccarton for the year ending 10th November, 1887, was £374 12s. 6d. At the end of ten years all the estate and funds are to be transferred to the provost and magistrates of Kilmarnock, the Established Church clergymen of the town, the minister of Riccarton and the trustees under the settlement, who shall thereafter administer the trust, and shall be the trustees. The mansion and grounds have been open to the public since shortly after the bequest, every week day, and part of Sunday. The minerals have been let, and are being worked, and the funds have been accumulating. It is calculated that from ten to twenty aged persons will find refuge in the house, should it be opened. The library contains 1,500 volumes. The place is much visited during the summer.

The civil parish of Kilmarnock consists ecclesiastically of four parishes—the Low, the High, St. Marne's, and St. Andrew's, each containing an Established church. Part of the original, or Low church, is of great antiquity. St. Marne's church, erected at a cost of £5,000, is a large handsome edifice, seated for 1,700 persons, and ornamented with an admirable Gothic tower. The Free Church has six places of worship in the town, and a seventh in the village of CROOKEDHOLM, in the parish. The United Presbyterians have also four churches in the town. Their church in King street is very neatly designed, and has a singularly elegant spire, forming a conspicuous object in the scenery of the town. There are also chapels for the Original Seceders, the Evangelical Union, the Scottish Episcopalians, and the Roman Catholics, besides places of worship for other denominations. The old parish churchyard and that of St. Andrew's are now closed, but a public cemetery, covering seven acres of ground, was opened in 1875, and it has now (1892) been found necessary to make a considerable addition to its size. The Fever Hospital and Dispensary, a stone building situated on an elevated site, was opened in 1868, the cost of its erection being £1,148.

The most remarkable object in this vicinity is the ruin of Dean Castle, formerly the property of the Boyds, Earls of Kilmarnock. It stands in a "dean," or hollow, less than a mile north from the town. It was burnt down in 1785. When in a perfect state it was considered capable of sustaining a long siege, as according to tradition, it had the means of drawing secret supplies through subterranean ways that communicated with Crawfordland Castle, two miles distant. A portion of this castle dates from 1066. Kilmarnock House, another edifice once belonging to and the last residence of that noble family, is situated in St. Marne's street. From this house proceeded the last unfortunate earl, in 1745, to join the standard of rebellion, which cost him his head. This building is now occupied as an industrial school. About three miles from the town, beautifully situated on the Carmel, is Rowallan Castle, which is of considerable antiquity, though the oldest portions are greatly decayed. It was the seat of the barons of Rowallan, and is famous as being the birthplace of Elizabeth More, or Mure, the first wife of Robert the Second of Scotland, who lived and died, tradition says, at Dunonald Castle. It was also the residence of Sir William Mure, author of a metrical translation of the Psalms of David, and other poetical works. The Rowallan estate has passed by marriage into the Hastings, or Loudoun family, whose residence is near Galston. Among the residences of the gentry may be named The Mount, the property of Lady Oranmore; Caprington Castle, Annahill House, and others.

The markets, which are held on Tuesday and Friday, are abundantly supplied with every necessary article of domestic consumption. Fairs are held the second Tuesday in May, last Thursday in July (commonly called the "gooseberry fair"), and the last Thursday in October, for horses. The cheese show and fair, held at the end of October, is affirmed to be the largest in the kingdom, and is attended by dealers from all parts of the country. It was calculated that at the show and fair held in 1884 fully 15,000 tons of cheese were represented at it. The October show is purely an agricultural one. About the middle of April a large show of cattle has been held for years. It ranks next to the great Ayr show. The acreage of the parish of Kilmarnock is about 9,552. As showing the progress of the town, it may be mentioned that in 1801 the population of the parish was only 8,079, whilst according to the census returns for 1891 it numbered 27,959; the burgh proper at the same date contained 26,132, and the parliamentary burgh, including Riccarton, 23,438.

The parish of RICCARTON is in the district of Kyle, lying on the left or south bank of the Irvine river, which separates it from Kilmarnock. It contains about 7,600 acres. The village stands on an eminence, a mile to the south of that town, but is almost connected with Kilmarnock by a long street. The parish extends about six miles in length by between two and three in breadth, and includes the village of HURLEFORD, at which latter place is situated the extensive works of the Eglinton Iron Co., also a large manufactory for fire-clay articles, belonging to Messrs. J. & R. Howie, and several extensive collieries. A very handsome Established church and a Free church have also been erected in the immediate neighbourhood, but in Kilmarnock parish; and a large subscription school was built for the education of the children of the working class, but is now one of the public schools of the parish. There is a sub-post office here. The village of Riccarton is remarkable for having been the residence of Sir Richard Wallace, uncle of the Scottish patriot Sir William Wallace, with whom the hero sometimes sojourned; and it was to Riccarton that he generally retired after performing any of his very daring exploits, before he openly unfurled his country's banner. The church of Riccarton is a comparatively modern structure, having been erected in 1823; it has a fine lofty steep gable, and from its elevated position has an ornamental effect on the country round. An excellent bridge across the Irvine materially improves the approach from Ayr to Kilmarnock. A considerable quantity of coal is raised in this parish. The principal landed proprietors are W. C. S. Cunningham, Esq., J.P., of Caprington, the Duke of Portland, and Captain Tuftell, R.N. Acreage, 7,550. In 1881 the parish contained 7,112 persons, and in 1891, 7,354.

KILMAURS is a parish in the district of Cunningham, with an acreage of 5,900. The town, a small one and a burgh of barony, is two miles N.W. from Kilmarnock, situated on the right bank of a rivulet called Kilmaurs or Carmel water. It was erected into a burgh of barony by James V., at the instance of Cuthbert, Earl of Glencairn, and his son, Lord Kilmaurs. The government of the town is vested in two bailies (chosen annually by the portner), before whom debts may be recovered. Kilmaurs is composed principally of one street, in the middle of which is a small town house, with a steeple and clock. A new public Hall for meetings has recently been erected by public subscription at a cost of about £1,000. There is a sub-post and money order office here. Formerly this place was somewhat noted for the manufacture of clasp-knives or whittles, the sharpness of the edge of which instrument gave rise in Ayrshire to a peculiar expression of comparison; a man of acute understanding and quickness of action is said to be "as sharp as a Kilmaurs whittle." The most prominent trade now is the manufacture of boots and shoes, and the factory of Messrs. Kellie & McLish give employment to a number of hands. Coals are raised in the parish, the surface of which consists of large level fields, interspersed with gentle declivities and elevations; the summits of the latter are well wooded, and the whole district has a pleasing appearance. Communication with all parts of the country is afforded by the Glasgow, Barrhead and Kilmarnock Joint Railway line which has a station here. There is an old pile of buildings near to the church, seemingly of very ancient origin, but with respect to its founder or the date or object of its erection, even tradition itself is silent. In the cemetery of the Glencairn family, adjacent to the church, is a piece of beautiful sculpture, a specimen of the taste and execution of former times, erected as a monument to the memory of the chancellor William, the ninth Earl. The Established church a few years ago underwent a thorough restoration, which included the erection of new chancel and tower and internal renovation, but in structure the old character of the edifice has been maintained. The cost, amounting to about £3,000, was defrayed jointly by the heritors and members of the congregation. There are also a Free church and a United Presbyterian church, and ample means of education are afforded the children of the inhabitants by the burgh school and a parochial school, now under the supervision of a School Board. The market, which was for a long period held on Thursday, has fallen into disuse; but fairs are still maintained on the 11th of June, and on the third Wednesday in that month, and the 11th of November. Population of the parish in 1881, 9,704; and in 1891, 4,458.

FENWICK or FINNICK, is a parish in the district of Cunningham, about 9 miles in length by 6 in breadth, containing 18,104 acres. The Kirk town is cheerfully situated about 4 miles N. by N. from Kilmarnock, on the banks of the Macharnock stream, on the road to Glasgow. This parish was originally a part of Kilmarnock, from which it was disjoined in 1641, and was called New Kilmarnock or New Kirk of Kilmarnock; but the village of Finnick, now known as Leigh Finnick or Rose Finnick, to distinguish it from the new village which sprang up beside the Kirk, and was called the Kirk town, imposed its name upon the whole parish before many years. The modern spelling Fenwick was unknown until 1741. At a former period the district was chiefly moorland; but it has undergone most material improvement, and the greater portion of the parish is now under cultivation, and the village possesses the advantage of a sub-post and money order office. Guthrie, a noted champion of the Covenant before the Revolution of 1688, was the first minister of this parish. He was a celebrated and very eccentric preacher, distinguished by the title of the "fool of Finnick," an appellation which even appeared on the title pages of his published sermons. Guthrie is said to have held conventicles in the Castle of Rowallan, the residence of Sir William Mure (who suffered severely by fines and imprisonment for his attachment to the Presbyterian cause), after he was ejected from the church in 1664. John Howie, who chronicled the sufferings of the martyrs and confessors of the Covenant, was tenant of the moorland farm of Lochgoin, in this parish, and his descendants still continue to occupy it. Many memorials of the Covenanters are preserved in this sequestered farmhouse, including the bible and sword of Captain Paton, the flag of the Finnick Covenanters used at Bothwell Bridge, &c. The old castle of Polkellie, at Polkellie Hall, was the residence of Robert Mure, of Polkellie, &c. Lord Provost of Edinburgh, whose wife was the first person in the district who was prosecuted for heresy, in 1494. The church was built on the lands of Finnick (Gaelic) or Finnick, which became the name of the parish. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterian congregation. Cattle fairs are held on the first Wednesday in May and the first Tuesday in November. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,152, and in 1891, 1007.

CRAIGIE is a small postal village, about 4 miles s. from Kilmarnock, its nearest railway station, and possesses a church and a school. It is situated on an elevation, about 400 feet above the sea, and commands a pleasant view of the surrounding country and the sea. The old castle of Craigie, now in ruins, was long the residence of the Wallace, of Craigie and Riccarton. The immortal Scottish patriot Sir William Wallace was descended from a younger branch of this family. The parish, which is purely agricultural, and has an area of 6,576 acres, is about eight miles in length by two in breadth. Population in 1881, 590, and in 1891, 552.

GATHEAD is a hamlet in the parish of Kilmarnock and has a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway. Population returned with the parish.

HURLFORD is a populous village, about 2 miles from Kilmarnock, and as above mentioned in the parish of Riccarton.

CROSSHOUSE is a small village in the parish of Kilmarnock, 2 miles w. from Kilmarnock, and has a station on the Glasgow and South-Western railway. The collieries and fire-clay works in the neighbourhood give employment to a number of the inhabitants. Population returned with the parish.

CROOKEDHOLM is a hamlet in the parish of Riccarton. Hurlford is the nearest railway station, half a mile distant. Population returned with the parish.

KILWINNING

IS a parish, post and market town, the former containing 10,969 acres, in the district of Cunningham. The town, a thriving one, and of considerable extent, was made into a police burgh in November, 1889, and is governed by a provost and two junior magistrates. It is 24 miles s.w. from Glasgow, 8 n.w. of Irvine, 4 n.e. of Saltcoats, the same distance s. of Dalry, 10 w.n.w. of Kilmarnock, and 5 e. from Ardrossan, on the Glasgow and South-Western line of railway. A new branch of the Lanarkshire and Ayrshire Railway, from Barrmill to Ardrossan, was completed in the summer of 1884, the station being close to that on the Glasgow and South-Western line. There is likewise a station on the Caledonian line opened in 1890. Kilwinning is situated on rising ground, about two miles from the sea; stretching westward from the right bank of the Garnock, and approached by excellent roads, passing through a highly cultivated agricultural district. The weaving and manufacture of gauzes, muslins, shawls, &c., was till lately carried on to an important extent for the Glasgow and Paisley markets. There are large iron, coal, and fire-clay works in the neighbourhood, and in the town are branches of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited. Several engineering works, an iron foundry, and a worsted spinning mill are carried on in a spirited manner. The agricultural produce of the parish is considerable, and coals, which are obtained in abundance, are conveyed by a railway passing from east to west across the parish. A public park, for which £7,000 was bequeathed by the late John McGavin, Esq., formerly of this town, has been open for some years. Besides the Established and Free churches, there are chapels belonging to the Evangelical Union, Original Seceders, United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics. The only remarkable objects are the picturesque ruins of the ancient abbey, founded by Hugh de Morville, in 1140, and the beautiful tower of the church, to which its style of architecture bears no resemblance. This tower cost, exclusive of the old materials, the sum of £2,000, raised by subscription, to which the Earl of Eglinton was a liberal contributor. The present Earl has a fine mansion in the neighbourhood, called Eglinton Castle. In addition to the numerous schools in the locality, there is a very handsome and commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, at a cost of £8,700, to accommodate about 800 children. Kilwinning was the place in Scotland where freemasonry was first established; it was said to have been introduced by the foreign architect who was employed in erecting the abbey. Besides the distinction acquired from its ancient masonic lodge, it is also remarkable from being the seat of a company of archers, ascertained to have existed so early as the year 1488; and a society of that kind is still in existence. Fairs are held on the first Monday in February and the first Monday in November; and a cattle show in connection with the Farmers' Society is held annually. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 7,037, and in 1891, 7,007, of which 3,835 belonged to the town.

KIRKMICHAEL AND DALRYMPLE,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF CROSS-HILL.

KIRKMICHAEL is a small village and parish, containing 15,950 acres, in the district of Carrick. The village is 76 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 22 s. from Kilmarnock, 10 s. of Ayr, the same distance E. of Dalmellington, 8 N.E. of Dalry, 4 W. by N. from Straiton, and 3½ E. from Maybole, pleasantly situated in a valley, on the road from Newton Stewart to Glasgow, 86 miles from the former, and 44 from the latter. The general surface of this parish is hilly, towards the south and east mountainous and rocky; but the whole is more or less cultivated. The Girvan runs through the parish; the Doon is its boundary for several miles, and the Dyrock water flows through the village, which latter derives its name from a church that formerly stood here, dedicated to St. Michael; the present religious structure, which is neat and commodious, was built in 1787, on its site. In the churchyard is the tomb of Gilbert McAdam, who was shot in 1685 by the laird of Culzean and Ballochmyle, for his adherence to the covenants. The Board school was built in 1875, at a cost of £1,100, and accommodates 150 scholars. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,989, and in 1891, 2,068; of the village, 310.

CROSS-HILL is a village in the above parish, on the left bank of the Girvan, about 2 miles S. of Kirkmichael, and is a quoad sacra parish in itself for church and school purposes. There are Established and Free Churches here, and also a Board school. Population in 1881, 740.

DALRYMPLE is a small village and parish in the district of Kyle pleasantly situated on the banks of the Doon, 4 miles N. from Kirkmichael. The parish, which is about eight miles at its extreme length, and three in breadth, contains 7,833 acres, and comprises some beautiful undulating and flat land, mostly arable. In the eastern portion of the parish are several coal and ironstone pits, which are wrought by the Dalmellington Iron Company, Limited. The name Dalrymple is said to be derived from Dalrymloch, signifying "the dale in which the king was slain;" and it is supposed that Colins, a king of the Britons, was killed in battle in this place; its Gaelic name, however, was Dail-a-Chruim-Puill, or "dale of the crooked pool." Near the Roman road, which intersects the parish, was found in a moss a vessel of Roman bronze, by antiquarians conjectured to be of that kind used by the priests in their sacrificial oblations; and in 1894 was discovered, near the same spot, an ancient vase; both these relics are in the possession of the Rev. John Wallace, the minister of Dalrymple. In the parish are three British fortlets, on commanding sites, and the ruins of three castles; these with the beautiful loch of Martnaham, the waters of which are covered annually with the yellow and white water lily, are objects of considerable interest and curiosity to the visitor to this district. The Established and Free churches are the places of worship, and there is a stone school and school house, built by the School Board in 1875, at a cost of upwards of £1,500, to accommodate 160 scholars. In 1881 the population of the parish was 1,982, and in 1891, 1,988; of which 320 belong to the village.

KIRKOSWALD

IS a parish containing 14,861 acres, in the district of Carrick. The village, old and picturesque, is 13 miles s.w. from Ayr, and 4½ s.e. from Maybole, situated on a line of road from Portpatrick to Glasgow, 90 miles from the former, and 48, by the new road, from the latter town. The parish is highly interesting, as it contains within its limits several objects of great attraction for the stranger and the tourist. The sea coast presents a sandy beach, with a beautiful rich sward to the very sea mark; and there are two lakes, from whence flow many small streams that wander through the district towards the sea. Of late years there have been raised various delightful plantations, particularly near the shore around Culzean Castle, the beautiful seat of the Marquis of Ailsa, who is lord of the manor. The mansion, which is a fine specimen of ancient architecture, is placed on a rock overhanging the sea; and on the land side are delicious gardens with a noble park of great extent. Not far from the castle is a fort, mounted with thirteen guns and a mortar battery, both kept in efficient order. In a low valley between Kirkoswald and Mybole are the remains of the abbey of Crossraguel, founded in 1244, by Duncan, first Earl of Carrick, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary; at one period it was possessed by Cluniac monks from Paisley. At the Reformation it became the property of the Earl of Cassillis, but it now pertains to the Right Hon. Sir James Ferguson, M.P., of Kilkerran. A lighthouse stands upon the site of Turnberry Castle, once the residence and property of Robert Bruce. Within view of this memorial of former centuries, and not more than a mile from it, lies the farm of Shanter, once the residence of Douglas Graham, the hero of Burns's poem "Tam o' Shanter." Population of the parish in 1881, 1,781, and in 1891, 1,858.

LARGS AND FAIRLIE.

LARGS, popularly called the Largs, is a neat town and sea bathing place, in the parish of that name; 70 miles w. by s. from Edinburgh, 30 s. w. from Glasgow, 14 s. from Greenock, and 20 n. from Irvine, charmingly situated on the Frith of Clyde, in the northern extremity of the county. It is now one of the favourite retreats on the western coast for ruralising and bathing, the communication with Glasgow and other large towns on this side of the country being rendered convenient and expeditious by means of steamboats, which ply daily on the Clyde; or by rail from Port Glasgow, or Greenock, to Wemyss Bay, thence by boat to Largs, a distance of about six miles from the latter place. A line of railway was opened in June, 1885, connecting that of Fairlie, thus making a direct communication, via Ardrossan to Glasgow. During the summer season it is enlivened by the presence of a great number of visitors, for all of whom good accommodation is provided by the inns and private lodging houses. There are some good shops, in which a fair amount of business is transacted in all the various departments of a retail trade, and the monetary transactions of the town are facilitated by branches respectively of the Royal Bank of Scotland, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the British Linen Company Bank. Considerable business is carried on in the fishery. The annual fair, commencing on the first Tuesday in June after the 12th (St. Columbus's day), lasts two days. At Mackernston place there has been erected, at a cost of about £900, by the inhabitants of the town, a beautiful granite fountain, as a mark of respect to the late Mr. John Campbell, surgeon, who for 61 years was a resident of the town.

The parish church, a handsome structure of red stone, with a spire and clock, is a great ornament. There are also a Free church, one for United Presbyterians, the gift of John Clark, Esq. J.P., and erected at a cost of £20,000; an Episcopal church, and one for Roman Catholics; while the Brisbane Academy (an endowed establishment, now amalgamated with the Board school) affords the inhabitants ample means for educating their families. Few districts possess more romantic scenery; the old castles of Skelmorlie, Knock and Fairlie, with Brisbane House, adorn the parish. It was on the plains of Largs that the celebrated battle was fought between the Scots under Alexander III. and the Danes under Haco, King of Norway, in their last invasion of this country, in 1263. In the glen near Kelburn is a cascade, which has a perpendicular fall of fifty feet; and various other natural beauties arrest the attention and excite the admiration of the traveller. An aisle in the church, built by Sir Robert Montgomerie, of Skelmorlie, more than two centuries back, has underneath a vault, in which lies the body of Sir Robert, enclosed in a leaden coffin bearing a Latin inscription, signifying "I was dead before myself, I anticipated my proper burial alone of all mortals, following the example of Cæsar;" alluding, it is said, to Charles V., who it may be remembered, had his funeral obsequies performed previous to his death. The explanation usually given of this strange affair is that Sir Robert was a very pious man, and was in the habit of making nocturnal descents into the vaults to perform his devotions, thus burying himself alive. The acreage of the parish is 21,850, and the population was in 1881, 5,149, and in 1891, 5,320.

FAIRLIE, or Fairley, is a small village in the parish of and about 2½ miles s. from Largs. In the vicinity are Kelburn Castle, the picturesque seat and family mansion of the Earl of Glasgow; Fairlie Craig, the residence of the Dowager Countess of Glasgow; and likewise the ancient square tower of Fairlie Castle, formerly a seat of a family of that name. The extensive plantations around Kelburn Castle are highly ornamental to the general landscape. There are, besides, some elegant villas, which harmonise with and add to the beauties of the parish. There are two places of worship in Fairlie, one an Established church, the other a Free church; likewise a handsome Board school. Population in 1881, 672, and in 1891, 847.

MAYBOLE,

AND THE VILLAGES OF CULROY OR MINISHANT, AND DUNURE OR FISHERTON.

MAYBOLE is a small neat market and post town, the capital of its parish, in the district of Carrick, 87 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 52 n. by E. from Portpatrick, 41 s.s.w. from Glasgow, 25 n. from Ballantrae, 22 s. by w. from Kilmarnock, 12 s. by E. from Girvan, and 9 s. from Ayr. It lies in a charming part of the country, on the face of a gentle eminence, with a southern exposure, and surrounded by lovely scenery, formed of parks, highly cultivated. Maybole was created a free burgh of barony in November, 1516, on a grant to Gilbert, Earl of Cassilis, the patron, and to the provost and prebendaries of the collegiate church of Maybole, to which belonged the lands whereon the town stands. In October, 1639, an act ordaining the head court of Carrick to be held at Maybole was passed by the Lords of the Articles. The streets of the town are narrow, and contain no eminently fine places or public buildings. Several of the dwellings bear a venerable aspect, and doubtless were, at a distant period, the domiciles of dignified personages. The mansion house or castle of the Cassilis family is the finest surviving specimen of the winter seats formerly existing in Maybole. It is a stately, well-built structure, standing in the centre of the town, and is said to have been the residence of the repudiated Countess of Cassilis. It is now occupied by Thomas Smith, Esq. factor to the Marquis of Ailsa, who is lord of the manor.

The building now used as the town hall belonged to the Kennedys of Blairquhan. The principal business carried on here is the manufacture of boots and shoes; there are also two works for the manufacture of agricultural implements, and weaving is carried on to some extent for Glasgow houses.

The collegiate church has been for some time in ruins, and the ground appropriated as a private cemetery for the Cassillis family and a few others in the neighbourhood. The parish church, a quoad sacra, a Free church, United Presbyterian church, an Episcopal church, a Wesleyan Methodist chapel, and a Roman Catholic chapel are the places of worship. There are two Board schools, and one for Roman Catholics. The town is governed by police commissioners. Yearly and quarterly meetings of the Carrick Farmers' Society are held here; the annual one is on the first Thursday in August, and the quarterly on the first Thursday in the months of February, May and November; the quarterly in August merges into the yearly assemblage. In the vicinity are many interesting objects, among which are the celebrated ruins called Crossraguel (noticed in the sketch of Kirkoswald), and Killehenzie castle, which was a similar state of dilapidation, but has of late years undergone repairs; it once belonged to a branch of the Cassillis family, who were for a long time hereditary bailies of Carrick. Ancient coins have been frequently found in considerable numbers. In the neighbourhood are two remarkably fine springs of water, popularly called "St. Cuthbert's" and "Well Trees;" the latter is said to yield ten thousand imperial gallons per hour. The acreage of the parish is 21,993.

The population of the quoad sacra parish in 1881 was 2,985; and in 1891, 3,288; the town numbering 5,467.

CULROX, or MINISHANT, is a small village in the parish of Maybole, 3½ miles from that town, on the road to Ayr, from which it is 5½ miles distant. Two manufactories for woollen goods are established in this village. There are also a Board school, and a church erected by the late Sir Peter Coats, in memory of his wife, who died 21st April, 1877. The population of Minishant in 1891 was 146.

DUNURE, or FISHERTON, is a small village in the parish of Maybole, 6¾ miles therefrom, and 7¾ from Ayr, chiefly inhabited by fishermen. There are an Established church and manse, a Board school, and post office. Dunure House, the property of Francis T. R. Kennedy, Esq. is at present occupied by George White, Esq. Near the village are the ruins of Dunure castle, the ancient seat of the Kennedys, who have now removed their residence to Culzean. The population of the quoad sacra parish of Fisherton in 1891 was 598, that of the village of Dunure being 217.

MUIRKIRK,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF GLENBUCK AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

MUIRKIRK is a parish containing 30,229 acres in Kyle district.
The village, a thriving and considerable one, is 50 miles w.s.w.
from Edinburgh, 30 s. from Glasgow, 26 E. by N. from Ayr, 24 s.e.
from Kilmarnock, and 16 N.W. from Sauguhar, situated near the right bank of the water of Ayr, at the junction of the roads leading from Glasgow to Dumfries, and from Edinburgh to Ayr. Although in a district rude and bleak, the land is being fast reclaimed from its original mossy and moorish character; another considerable portion is, however, profitably employed in grazing and pasture and in 1835, the black-faced sheep fed in this parish carried off the Highland Society's prize, and also gained the first prize at the Paris Exhibition in 1862. Though nature has not here been bountiful to the farmer, or encouraged the labours of the agriculturist, she has been very generous to the miner, for coal, iron and limestone are liberally disseminated throughout the territory. At the Eglinton Iron Company's works are three blast and several puddling furnaces and rolling mills constantly in operation, for the manufacture of pig and malleable iron. Extensive works have also been added by the Company for the manufacture of chemicals. Banking accommodation is afforded by a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited.
The principal proprietors of the land in the parish are Charles Howatson, Esq. J.P., C.C. (of Glenbuck), the Earl of Home (of Douglas), John G.
A. Baird, Esq. J.P. (of Muirkirk), the Hon. A. M. Cathcart (of Brock-lock), and Captain C. Tufnell, R.N. (of Dollars). The parish is also celebrated for grouse and other shooting. Its length is nine miles, by an average breadth of about six; bounded on the north-east by Douglas, on the south and south-west by Auchinleck, and on the west and north-west by Sorn and Galston. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, one for the United Presbyterians, an Evangelical Unit n chapel, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The Glasgow and South-Western and Caledonian lines of railway run close to the village, at which there is a station. In November, 1887, a neat building was opened called Baird's Institute, the munificent gift of J. G. A. Baird, Esq. J.P. It is in the domestic Gothic style of architecture, and consists of reading room, recreation room, library, &c. The total cost was over £2,000. Fairs are held for hiring on the first Tuesday after the 18th February, and the first Thursday after the 18th December, and for cattle, &c. on the second Friday in June. The population of the parish was in 1881, 5,123;

and in 1891, 5,164, of which 4,100 were returned for the village.

GLENBUCK is a small mining village in the parish of Muirkirk, situated about 3 miles N.E. from that place. The works of the Cairntable Gas Coal Co. Limited, give employment to a large number of the inhabitants. The village is in the centre of the Covenanted district, and 3 miles from Brown's Stone, at Priesthill. There is a public school, also a railway and telegraph station on the Caledonian line, about one mile from the village. Population, 1,100.

NEWMILNS AND DARVEL.

NEWMILNS is a manufacturing town and burgh of barony in the parish of LONDON, district of Cunninghame, 24 miles S. of Glasgow, 18 N.E. of Ayr, 7 E. of Kilmarnock, and 16 N. of Cumnock, situated on the bank of the river Irvine, about 2 miles E. of Galston. It was made a burgh of barony by King James IV. in 1490, and the charter was confirmed by Sir Matthew Campbell, of Loudoun, in 1566. The bailies are competent to hold courts, from which there is no appeal, except the court of sessions, and in other respects their jurisdiction is as ample as that of most royal burghs. There is a police commission for the better regulation and improvement of the town, consisting of seven members; the chief magistrate is the chief commissioner. The manufacture of muslins and lace is carried on here extensively, a large number of hands being employed in this branch. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church. There is a Board school, also one endowed by the late Lady Flora Hastings, and built at a cost of over £6,000; and three Sabbath evening schools—in the latter more than seven hundred children of the working classes receive instruction. The Working Men's Institute was erected by Miss Brown, of Lanfine, and is similar to those at Galston and Darvel. In the centre of the town is seen the remains of an old castle, said to have been erected as early as that of Edinburgh, but record is silent or obscure concerning its ancient possessors. Within the parish, and about a mile and a half from the town, is Loudoun Castle, the elegant seat of Baron Donington. It is large and magnificent, in the castellated or baronial style, standing in the midst of an extensive and well-wooded park. Near the mansion is the old parish kirk of Loudoun, bearing the early date of 1015. The only part now standing is that which formed the choir, and is now the place of sepulchre of the noble families Loudoun and Hastings; and here rest the remains of the lamented Lady Flora Hastings, to whose memory, and that of her mother, a granite obelisk was erected in 1883, by a near relative, Miss Henry, of Cheltenham. A branch line of the Glasgow and South-Western railway is open for traffic as far as Newmilns, and a public conveyance running between there and Darvel attends the arrival and departure of all trains. The parish of Loudoun comprises 15,486 acres. Population in 1881, 5,229, and in 1891, 6,374, of which Newmilns (exclusive of Greenholm in Galston parish) contained 2,885.

DARVEL is a considerable postal village and police burgh in the same parish as Newmilns, and is comprised of one principal street, from which a few small ones diverge. The manufacture of lace, lace and tapestry curtains, and muslin is extensively carried on, and affords employment to a number of hands. The Marchioness of Hastings some years ago formed a cemetery in this village. There is also a free school, endowed by the late Alexander Mair, for the education of the children of this village. The latter school has now been placed under the direction of the School Board. The places of worship are the Established church, an edifice in the Gothic style, erected at a cost of about £3,000, a Free church, and one each belonging to the United Presbyterians, Original Seceders, and Evangelical Union, some two or three being of a comparatively recent date. The Working Men's Institute was erected by Miss Brown, of Lanfine, in July, 1870, at a cost of £2,200; it contains a library and reading room, also a room for various kinds of amusements. Population in 1881, 1,690, and in 1891, 2,001.

OCHILTREE

Is a small but pleasant village, in the parish of that name, district of Kyle, 64 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 49 n.w. from Dumfries, 37 s. from Glasgow, 28 n. by E. from Girvan, 22 n.w. from Sanquhar, 16 s. from Kilmarnock, the like distance N.E. from Maybole, 11½ E. from Ayr, and 4 w. from Old Cumnock, situated on the south side of the Lugar water, and on the high road from Ayr to Dumfries and Edinburgh. The railway station is about a mile and a half from the village. The country around is delightfully picturesque, and the face of the parish, which is pretty level, with some agreeable undulations, is well watered. The great Scottish reformer, John Knox, married his second wife at this village; she was the daughter of Lord Ochiltree, who at that period resided at Ochiltree House. Ochiltree formerly gave a baron's title to a branch of the family of Stewart. There are Established and Free churches, and public schools; also a subscription library well selected. The acreage of the parish is 18,323. Population in 1881, 1,493, and in 1891, 2,062, of which the village possessed 499.

SALTCOATS AND STEVENSTON.

SALTCOATS, a seaport town, is situated partly in the parish of Ardrossan, and partly in the parish of Stevenston; it lies between these towns, and is less than a mile from each, 73 miles s.s.w. from Edinburgh, 29 s.s.w. from Glasgow, 19 n. from Ayr, and 14 w. by n. from Kilmarnock. The town was made a burgh on 25th May, 1885, by the adoption of the General Police Act for Scotland. It is a place of great resort for summer residents from all quarters, the accommodation in neat, comfortable cottages having been greatly increased in recent years, and the communication by express and ordinary trains offering special facilities for daily travellers in summer. In the beginning of last century a harbour was constructed for the shipment of coal, of which one of the most extensive fields in Scotland lies in the immediate neighbourhood. The first canal made in Scotland was formed here by Mr. Cunningham, for conveyance of coal towards the harbour. The shipping and shipbuilding trade was extensive and flourishing for many years, but on the erection of the extensive iron works at Ardeer, Stevenston, by Messrs. Merry and Cunningham, in 1852, the shipping was for the most part transferred to the commodious harbour and docks of Ardrossan. Saltcoats derived its name from the cots or cottages occupied by the first inhabitants, who were employed in making salt, in which article there was at one time a very large trade; and it is one of the few if not the only place now in Scotland where there is manufactured that superior marine salt so greatly appreciated for dairy purposes, and which has contributed in some degree to the superiority of the far-famed Dunlop cheese. Though deprived of its former extensive shipping trade, Saltcoats is now a much more flourishing town than ever it was in former days. Its close proximity to Ardrossan, on the one side, with its extensive harbours, docks and public works, the two towns being nearly united, and with Stevenston on the other, where are the Ardeer and Ayrshire foundries, and the Ardeer colliery, and the opening of the Auchencharvie colliery at the east end of the town, has not only improved the trade of the place, but has also increased the population and stimulated building to a very large extent. In the west end quite a new town of private residences and summer quarters has been built of late. Perhaps no town in the west of Scotland has made more progress in the last thirty years in internal improvements; the town has been thoroughly drained by sewers through all the streets, and branch drains to every dwelling-house, accomplished by and at the instance of the two Parochial Boards, who carry out a vigilant sanitary control over the town. At a threatened approach of cholera some years ago, Dr. Littlejohn was appointed by the Board of Supervision to survey the coast towns, and of Saltcoats he says: "I found the town of Saltcoats in an excellent sanitary state. No Scotch town of equal population that I have visited shows so much creditable sanitary improvement. The drainage is complete, the paving is excellent. I cannot conclude without bringing the conduct of the Local Authority of the parish of Ardrossan (Saltcoats) under the favourable consideration of the Board of Supervision." As a result of these sanitary improvements, and indicative of the healthfulness of the locality, the death rate has for many years been very low. A justice of the peace court is regularly held in the Town Hall on the first Friday of every month. Within the last thirty years there have been erected in this place five new churches and three new manse, besides the Free Church school and other public schools; and there has been constructed at the north end of the town a handsome and commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, to accommodate about 600 children. The gas works combine three remarkable features, the cheapest gas, the highest dividend, and the best quality maintained in the shire. The town lamps are lighted by the company free. An abundant supply of gravitation water of excellent quality has likewise been provided. A new Town House, to supersede a previous one built in 1825, is now (1892) in course of erection in Countess street. The Royal Bank of Scotland and the Bank of Scotland have branches here, and each occupies a handsome building. The Mission Coast Home has been a remarkable success here. This institution, which was commenced in a room and kitchen by Mr. James Smith, a devoted missionary, and ably conducted by Mr. Wm. Bryden, now consists of three long buildings, affording accommodation and treatment free to about sixty inmates, each remaining for a short period; and the improvement in health, which is the general result of a short stay in the home, has become so remarkable that there are sometimes hundreds of applicants waiting their turn for admission. The cost is defrayed by voluntary subscription. Saltcoats is much resorted to for sea bathing, the extensive sandy beach on each side of the town being particularly suitable, the water being considered strong and pure. Salt water baths were, a few years ago, erected in connection with the principal hotel, the Saracen's Head. The Lanarkshire and Ayrshire railway, which was opened in the summer of 1888, and the Glasgow and South Western Railway Company have each a station in the town. Population of the town in 1881, 5,096, but is now (1892) estimated at over 7,000.

STEVENSTON is a mining village, one mile from Saltcoats, and three from Kilwinning. It derives its name from Stephen or Steven, the son of Richard, who obtained a grant of lands from Richard Marville, a constable of Scotland; the latter, a very celebrated man, died in 1189. Under this grant, Stephen settled here, and gave his patronymic designation to the place. The parish abounds in valuable seams of coal. The extensive ironworks of Ardeer were erected here by Messrs. Merry & Cuninghame in 1852. There are very large works for the manufacture of dynamite, in the occupation of Nobel's Explosives Co., Limited, and three large foundries. The extensive sands stretching from Saltcoats to Irvine have been frequently suggested as a suitable deposit ground for the sewage of Glasgow. The Established church is a large handsome building, of modern erection, very prominently situated. The old church formerly belonged to the monks of Kilwinning. There are also Free and United Presbyterian churches. The Bank of Scotland has a branch establishment here. In the centre of the town is erected a commodious school, built under the Scotch Education Act, to accommodate about 650 children. The parish contains 8,771 acres. The population of the whole parish in 1881, was 5,694, and in 1891, 6,035.

STEWARTON, DUNLOP, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

STEWARTON is a parish of 13,626 acres, in the district of Cunninghame. The town is 16 miles s. by w. from Glasgow, 8 N. from Irvine, 5½ N. from Kilmarnock, and 3 N.N.W. from Fenwick; situated in a pleasant part of the country, on the banks of the water of Annock, close to a station on the Glasgow, Barrhead, and Kilmarnock Joint railway. The parish, which is about ten miles in length, and varying from three to four in breadth, is a rich agricultural district, highly cultivated and improved, and has long been famous for its dairy produce; it is adorned by several tastefully laid out seats of the gentry. For centuries Stewarton remained an inconsiderable and obscure village, and it is only of a comparatively recent date that, owing to the general extension of trades and manufactures, it has considerably increased in size. It is now a police burgh, and is governed by a senior and two junior bailies and six commissioners of police. The intellectual wants of the inhabitants are amply provided for by the Cunninghame Institution, which has an extensive library and reading room, besides a recreation room, all amply furnished and liberally supported by the lord of the manor. There is also attached a large and a lesser hall, several committee rooms, &c. Several woollen mills are engaged in carding and spinning for the carpet and bonnet trades. The staple articles of manufacture are Scotch bonnets and military forage caps, in which branches many firms are engaged. The manufacture of hosiery has also been introduced, and gives employment to a number of hands. There are now several large factories, and so rapidly has this trade grown that it bids fair to become the staple industry. The town has long been famous for the manufacture of spindles and flyers, and an additional mill for this trade has just been opened. Ample banking accommodation is also afforded the town and neighbourhood by the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Royal Bank of Scotland, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, each having a branch here. The invention of "portable bee boxes" by a Mr. Allan, of this town, has proved a great advantage in the management of bees; these boxes are so constructed as to prevent "swarming," and are highly approved by beekeepers all over the kingdom, their manufacture being an important item in the local industries. District courts are held on the first Thursday of each month, for the recovery of small debts, and such business as falls under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace for the parishes of Stewarton, Dunlop, and Fenwick. The places of worship are Established and Free churches, one each for United Presbyterians and Independents, and a Methodist chapel. There is a Board school, erected under the Scotch Education Act, which affords accommodation for about 600 children. Fairs are held on the Wednesday before the last Thursday in October for cattle, this being the largest fair for Ayrshire dairy stock in Scotland; summer fair Monday before first Tuesday in May, for cattle; and horse fair on the Wednesday before Skeirs Thursday, and first Wednesday in May. The population of the parish of Stewarton in 1881, was 4,309, and in 1891, 3,804.

DUNLOP is a village 2½ miles N. from Stewarton, romantically seated on the banks of the Glazart, on the main road leading from Kilmarnock to Paisley; and when seen from a little distance, through the trees which embosom it, has an agreeable and retired appearance. The Established church, erected in 1835, is ornamental to the neighbourhood; its predecessor having suffered from the combined effects of age and weather. In the churchyard is a small arched chamber, formed under the direction of Lord Viscount Clanaboyes, in 1641, over the grave of his father, the Rev. Hans Hamilton, who for forty-one years was minister of the parish, it contains a well-executed monument in marble, justly deserving attention. A schoolhouse was also built by the same nobleman, in the wall of which is a stone bearing the above date, and an inscription stating amongst other particulars that it was erected and endowed by him "in love of his parish, in King James the Sixth his Reign;" although in excellent preservation, it has long ceased to be occupied as an educational establishment. The village likewise possesses a Free church and a Board school. Here has recently been erected a new Public hall, including good reading and recreation rooms. The structure is a neat stone building, and was raised by public subscription at a cost of about £800. The parish to which the village gives name lies in the bailiery of Cunninghame, and has long been noted for the excellent quality of its cheese, which bears a high character throughout Scotland. Several firms are also engaged in ham curing. About the close of the seventeenth century, one Barbara Gilmour is said to have commenced the practice of making cheese from the entire milk, nothing but skimmed milk having been used in the process in this district previous to that period; a present all the cheese similarly made in the western counties receives the appellation of "Dunlop," a large quantity being made here annually. There is also a considerable trade in meal carried on by the inhabitants of the village and surrounding territory. A branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, is established here. Dunlop House, in this parish, is one of the finest mansions in the county. Near the village, and resting on a small knoll, is a stone of large dimensions, called the "O'Great Stone," supposed to have been employed in some ancient rites of worship. Two fairs for the sale of dairy stock are held, one about the middle of May, the other on the 12th of November; both are generally well attended. In 1881 the parish of Dunlop, the acreage of which is 7,179, had a population of 1,363, and in 1891, 1,410.

STRAITON,

WITH THE VILLAGE OF PATNA.

STRAITON is a large parish of 49,891 acres, in Carrick district. The village, a neat one, is 80 miles s.w. from Edinburgh, 26 s. from Kilmarnock, 11 s.e. from Ayr, the same distance n.e. from Girvan, 7 s.e. from Maybole, the same distance n.e. from Dailly, and 6 s.w. from Dalmellington; finely situated on the banks of the Girvan, and on the road leading from Glasgow to Newton-Stewart, 48 miles s. by w. from the former, and 30 n. from the latter town. The nearest railway station is Kilkerran, 6 miles distant, on the Ayr, Maybole and Girvan branch of the Glasgow and South-Western line. The parish, which extends about twenty miles in length by eight in breadth, consists for the most part of pasture land, the surface, especially in the south-east, being wild and rocky, interspersed with a number of small lakes; there is, however, a considerable supply of natural wood and several extensive plantations, and besides the Girvan and lakes it is watered by the Doon. The inhabitants are for the most part occupied in agricultural pursuits. About half a mile south of the village are the vestiges of an oblong entrenchment, from which an extensive view is commanded; about this spot, the artificial work of which must be presumed to be of Roman origin, various ancient relics have been found, particularly two carved vases or urns, containing ashes. The Marquis of Ailsa, A. F. M'Adam, Esq., the Right Hon. Sir James Fergusson, Bart., M.P., and Sir Edward Hunter Blair, Bart., are the proprietors of the land. Straiton has a neat parish church and a Board school. Milton Lodge, the property of, and occupied by, the last-named baronet, is situated about a quarter of a mile from the village. Blairquhan Castle, also the property of the same gentleman, is at present occupied by Otho N. Shaw, Esq. It is built in the Tudor style, and is situate about one mile from the village on the road to Girvan. Genoch Lodge, three miles and a half from the village, the property on the Marquis of Ailsa, is at present tenanted by Major Sturrock and James Dykes, Esq., as a shooting and f-hing residence. The population in 1881 of the quoad sacra parish was 701, and in 1891, 633.

PATNA is a small village in the parish of Straiton, situated on the banks of the Doon, which abounds with trout. Coal and ironstone are obtained plentifully in this neighbourhood, and furnishes employment to many of the villagers. The Duke of Portland is the proprietor of the land about here. The railway station is situated about half a mile from the village, and is on the Ayr and Dalmellington branch of the Glasgow and South-Western line. The places of worship are the Established and United Presbyterian churches. There is also a Board school to accommodate two hundred scholars erected in 1876, at a cost of £1,800. Population of the village in 1871, 766, and in 1881, 603.

TARBOLTON,

FAIRFORD, STAIR, JOPPA, AND COYLTON.

TARBOLTON is a parish, containing 12,059 acres, in the district of Kyle; the village, or town, is 12 miles s.e. from Irvine, 8 s. from Kilmarnock, and 8 n.e. from Ayr, situated about five miles from the shore of the Firth of Clyde, surrounded by a fine country and occupying a considerable space of ground. In the reign of the second Charles it was erected into a burgh of barony, and granted to John Cunningham, Esq. of Enterkine. The parish church is rather an elegant structure, with a beautiful spire, which contains a clock, having four dials; it was completed in 1821, at a cost of upwards of £2,500. A free library, the gift of the late John Lorimer, Esq., who was a native of Tarbolton, was opened in 1878. The parish is about seven and a half miles in length, and its average breadth is about four and a half. The Duke of Portland; John Bell, Esq., of Enterkine; Hugh Hamilton, Esq., of Pinnore; the Executors of William Orr Paterson, Esq., of Montgomery; John Stirling, Esq., of Whitehaven; the Executors of William C. Cunningham, Esq., of Afton Lodge; Thomas Davidson, Esq., of Drumley; and John C. Montgomerie, Esq., of Dalmore, are the principal proprietors. A fair is held the first Tuesday after the 11th of June. Population of parish in 1881, 8,599, and in 1891, 8,585.

JOPPA is a village, in the parish of COYLTON, about 7 miles s.w. from Tarbolton. The parish, which is adjacent to the west border of Kyle district, is about ten miles in length, by two in breadth, and contains 11,584 acres. The church, erected in 1833, is a handsome building, with accommodation for a congregation of more than seven hundred persons. Population of the parish of Coylton in 1881, 8,100, and in 1891, 2,667.

The parish of Stair is in the district of Kyle, lying on the south or right bank of the river Ayr, extending six miles in length by about two in breadth, and contains 5,376 acres. It was first erected into an independent parish in 1653, when it was severed from Ochiltree, for the accommodation of the noble family of Dalrymple, of Stair. The village, which comprises but a few dwellings and a neat parish church, is about 2½ miles s. from Tarbolton. Its situation is most romantic, and many highly ornamental mansions add to the beauty of the surrounding country, which abounds with coal. The earldom of Stair is merged in that of Dumfries. Population of the parish in 1881, 928, and in 1891, 1,269.

TROON, BARASSIE, DUNDONALD, LOANS, AND SYMINGTON.

TROON, an excellent and improving seaport, in the parish of Dundonald, is situated 75 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, 31 S.W. from Glasgow, 7 S. from Irvine, 9 S.W. from Kilmarnock, and about 8 N. from Ayr. Under the patronage of the Duke of Portland, this place has advanced steadily. Possessing uncommon natural advantages, in having an extensive bay and a secure harbour, into which vessels of great burthen can confidently enter with the wind from almost any point. Troon is obviously destined to attain a high rank in maritime estimation. It has two superior dry docks for repairing vessels, large storehouses, a lighthouse, a shipbuilding yard, and a rope and sail manufactory. There are two banking establishments and a reading room, all of which are situated about one mile from the harbour. From the extremity of the harbour, directly to Kilmarnock, runs a railway (one of the earliest in the country), on which immense quantities of coal are conveyed from the neighbourhood of the latter town, and thence shipped to Ireland, France, &c. The town is progressively enlarging, and in addition to the prosperity derived from its commerce as a port, it enjoys the advantage of being visited in the bathing season by numerous families, for whose accommodation many residences have been built. Extensive golf links are connected with the town, where this national game is much played. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, and one for the United Presbyterians. The Roman Catholics have also a chapel here, with a school in connection therewith. There are two Board schools under one head master. Population in 1881, 2,681, and in 1891, 3,849.

DUKDONALD is a parish on the sea coast, in the district of Carrick, extending eight miles along the shore, from the water of Irvine towards the south, and containing 12,865 acres. The village, situated about 4 miles N.E. from Troon (which is also in the parish), contains a church of the Establishment and a Free church, together with a Board school. Dundonald Castle is a ruin of great celebrity. It was erected in the twelfth century, and long occupied by the Lord High Stewards of Scotland; and in it Robert the Second died. It stands on an elevated and commanding situation, within two miles of the sea. Population of the parish in 1881, 8,089.

BARASSIE, a sea bathing village, and a station on the Glasgow and South-Western line, is a mile and a half north of Troon.

LOANS is a village 2 miles N.E. of Troon.

SYMINGTON, a parish of 3,736 acres, is in Kyle district, bounded by Monkton on the south, and Dundonald on the north, the village being about 2 miles E. from the latter. It contains a church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a Board school. The lands in this district were held at a remote period, under Walter, the first Stuart, by Symon Lockhart, from whom the place originally obtained the name which it bears at the present day. Population in 1881, 697; and in 1891, 1,621.

WEST KILBRIDE AND NEIGHBOURHOOD.

WEST KILBRIDE is a parish of 10,119 acres in the district of Cunninghame; the village is 73 miles w.s.w. from Edinburgh, 30 s.w. from Glasgow, 24 s.s.w. from Paisley, the like distance n.n.w. from Ayr, 22 s. from Greenock, 19 n.w. from Kilmarnock, 12 n.w. from Irvine, 7½ s. from Largs, 7 s.w. from Dalry, 5 n. from Saltcoats, 4½ s. from Fairlie, and 4 n.w. from Ardrossan; surrounded on all sides by rising grounds, which on the west protect it from the keen sea breezes, and on the opposite aspect from easterly winds. The scenery around is bold and romantic, interspersed with a few gentle and handsome residences. The ruins of Law Castle and Porteu Cross are in the immediate vicinity of the village, and are both objects of interest to the curious in architectural relics. Branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, are established here. The principal employment of the inhabitants is weaving.

The places of worship are the parish church, and Episcopal, Free and United Presbyterian churches. There is a Board school, and the village supports a considerable library. The parish extends six miles along the shore of the Frith of Clyde, and inland from two to three miles. The line of the Glasgow and South-Western railway being opened through to Largs, there is a station here. The district, independent of the ruins already mentioned, possesses other attractive vestiges of antiquity, and it is worthy of remark that off the sea line of the parish one of the largest vessels composing the Spanish Armada remains sunk in ten fathoms of water. An attempt was made about a century ago to examine the internal condition of this ship, and the operation succeeded so far that a piece of ordnance was raised from her bulk. A number of excellent residences have been built for the convenience of summer visitors. In 1881 the entire parish of West Kilbride had a population of 2,081 persons, and in 1891 2,273.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE ARDROSSAN AND FAIRLIE SECTION OF THE GLASGOW AND SOUTH-WESTERN LINE.
 Station, WEST KILBRIDE—John M'Leod, station master

BANFFSHIRE.

THIS county, which is of no great extent, is bounded on the north by the Frith of Moray, on the south and on the east by Aberdeenshire, and on the west by the shires of Moray and Inverness. Its form is elongated—irregularly concave towards its south-eastern border, and convex on its north-eastern, with a slip or apex inserted between the counties of Moray and Aberdeen. Its extent is fifty miles from north to south, and thirty-two miles from east to west, with an average breadth of twelve, containing 640 square miles, or 410,110 acres; it diminishes to an apex at the extreme western end, but the base of the coast extends twenty-five miles. The course of the Deveron for a considerable distance forms the eastern boundary between this county and that of Aberdeen; and the Spey, with little impropriety, may be accounted its western limit with Morayshire. This district was at one time a component part of the province of Moray, which altogether forms one of the finest tracts of ground in the northern part of Scotland. On the eastern side of the Deveron, in the district of Buchan, the parish of Gamrie, and some other spots of land belong to Banffshire, which both in point of size and in population ranks as the fifteenth county in Scotland.

SOIL, SURFACE AND CLIMATE, PRODUCE AND MANUFACTURES.—The soil, with few exceptions, is deep loam or tenacious clay. The face of the country is agreeably diversified by an intermixture of valleys and flat ground among the ranges of hills, with many beautiful fertile braes, productive of the finest crops, or serviceable for the excellence of their green pasture. The Strath of Glen-Avon proceeds from the forest of Glen-Avon, in a north-easterly direction, or on the left, and Strath Devon the right. Betwixt these is Glen-Livet, from whence, in a north-easterly direction, diverges Glen Fiddich. The principal eminences in the county are:—Noath, 1,830; Buck, or Cabrach, 2,377; Knockhill, 2,500; Corryhabbie, 2,558; Ben Rinnes, 2,747; and Cairn gorn, 4,244 feet above the level of the sea. The principal crops raised are barley, oats, potatoes, and sometimes wheat; but great attention is paid to the cultivation of turnips for feeding purposes, the rearing of cattle forming for the most part the chief object of the farmer. The Aberdeenshire polled cattle, and the pure short-horned are the breeds most esteemed. In many parts of the county fine flocks of sheep are to be met with, both of the Cheviot and the black-faced varieties. The fisheries are also of importance, more than a dozen towns and villages being connected, to a greater or less extent, with this industry. Cod, ling, haddock, whiting, halibut, skate and flounder frequent the Firth, and turbot and mackerel are occasionally caught, whilst in the season the herring yields a rich harvest to the fishermen. The curing of fish is of consequence, many persons being engaged in this branch of trade in several of the towns, in which are also extensive distilleries, Glenlivet whisky having become a famous brand. Under the auspices of parliamentary commissioners, the county has experienced considerable improvement, in being opened out by new roads. Limestone may be quarried beneath the surface of nearly the whole county, and at Portsoy is a fine vein of serpentine stone, called "Portsoy marble," as well as a species of granite which, when polished, exhibits the resemblance of Hebrew characters. Freestone, ironstone, marl and slate are also found in various parts. The chief articles of export are grain, fish and whisky; the salmon of the Spey and Deveron put together is also an article of great consideration. The principal imports are coal, iron, timber and manures. The climate of Banffshire is precarious. In the hilly districts, all the evils of cold and rain are often felt; and as frost and snow frequently set in without any interval of good weather, the harvests are not only endangered, but at times are not finished until the end of October. The lower part of the shire, from Duff to Forglan and Kiunnairdy (a tract of about twelve miles along the river side), and from Banff to Gordon Castle, including the districts of Boyne and Enzie, must be excepted, being nearly equal to the climate of Moray, and greatly surpassing most parts of the country in the fertility of the soil, the improvement of its agriculture, and the richness of its productions.

RIVERS, RAILWAYS, &c.—The waters of this county are the Spey, the Livet, the Avon, the Fiddich, the Deveron, the Isla, the Conglas, and several more minute streams. The Deveron is not navigable; but this, as well as the Spey, yield excellent salmon fishing, and as such is the source of much comfort and wealth to the inhabitants. Along the coast there are a number of rivulets, which fall with a quick descent, and are useful in propelling machinery in different little towns and villages where manufactures are established, or have begun to make their appearance. The Great North of Scotland line gives great facility for railway communication, most of the towns being connected therewith, either on the main line or one of its numerous branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Banffshire comprehends twenty-six civil and quoad sacra parishes, and is partly in the synod of Aberdeen and partly in that of Moray in Ross; it contains two royal burghs—Banff and Cullen; these are also contributory burghs, or those which, in conjunction with others, are represented in the Senate. One member sits for the shire at large, the present representative being the Right Hon. Robert W. Duff. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, &c. According to the census returns for 1881, the county contained a population of 62,736 persons, and by those for 1891, 64,167. The number of inhabited houses at the last-named period was 12,739. The parliamentary constituency in 1891–92 numbered 7,185. The valuation of the county for 1891–92 was (exclusive of railways), £229,384, and the valuation of railways £25,488.

ABERCHIRDER IN MARNOCH,

ORDIQUHILL, GRANGE, FORGLEN, ROTHIE MAY, CORNHILL AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ABERCHIRDER is a village in the parish of Marnoch, 9 miles s.w. Banff, and 6 s.e. from Cornhill railway station, seated on the river Deveron. In the village are places of worship for members of the Established, the Free, and the United Presbyterian churches, the Baptists, Episcopalians, and Roman Catholics. A Cottage Hospital is now (1892) in course of erection to the memory of the late Miss Elizabeth Ogilvie Rose Innes, of Netherdale Cottage, to whose generous bequest of £5,000 the inhabitants are indebted. The parish embraces an area of 14,954 statute acres. Cattle Markets are held on Tuesday after second Monday in March, Monday before 26th May (feeling), first Tuesday in August, the day before Huntly in September, and the Monday before 28th November (feeling). Population of the parish in 1881, 3,230, and in 1891, 3,006, the village of Aberchirder containing 1,222 of that number.

CORNHILL is a small village in the parish of Ordiquhill, and a station on the Banffshire section of the Great North of Scotland railway. The places of worship are an Established and a Free church. The fairs are held on the second Thursday in every month. Population in 1881, 150, and in 1891, 111.

ORDIQUHILL is a parish 9 miles s.w. of Banff, and 7 s. of Portsoy, and contains several mineral springs; in length it is 3½ miles, and in breadth 2½. Acreage 4,754. Population in 1881, 748, and in 1891, 684.

FORGLEN is a small parish, situate on the romantic banks of the Deveron, 7½ miles s. of Banff. In size it is the same as Ordiquhill and, like it, also contains some mineral springs. There is a church of the Establishment and a Free church. Acreage, 6,249. Population in 1881, 744, and in 1891, 714.

GRANGE is a parish 4 miles E. from Keith, and a station on the Banffshire section of the Great North of Scotland railway. The places of worship are the Established church, a Free church, and one belonging to the United Presbyterians. Edingight House erected by the late Sir James M. Innes, Bart. is within the parish, which contains an area of 15,041 acres. Population in 1881 1,754, and in 1891, 1,685.

ROTHIEMAY, a parish 6 miles N.N.E. of Huntly, and 7 E. of Keith, is seated on the rivers Deveron and Isla, and contains druidical remains, and Rothiemay House, a seat of the Duke of Fife. The parish is 7½ miles long by 5½ wide. There is a church of the Establishment and a Free church. Fairs are held on the third Tuesday in May, and the third Friday in October. Acreage, 9,865. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,363, and in 1891, 1,291.

ABERLOUR,

CRAIGELLACHIE AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ABERLOUR is a village founded in 1812, and created a burgh of barony in 1814. The village (which was formerly called Charlestown) is in the parish of its name, and is situated about 6 miles s.w. of Dufftown, where the river Lour joins the Spey. It consists of one long street and a large square. The places of worship are an Established church, a Gothic structure with tower and clock, a Free church, and an Episcopal church; the latter a very handsome structure in the early English style of architecture. Near this is an Orphanage, established in 1875, open to all denominations, and supported by voluntary contributions. This institution is for the reception of orphans and fatherless children in Scotland and elsewhere. Girls are also received and trained for service, and care is taken of them when they go into the world to earn their living, and a home made for them when out of situation or ill.
There are now upwards of 250 inmates. The accommodation is far short of the demand made for admission. Benn Rines, 2,755 feet above the level of the sea, is in this parish. A short distance from the village stands Aberlour House, formerly the property of Miss Macpherson Grant, but now belonging to John Ritchie Findlay, Esq., D.L., J.P. It is in the Grecian-Doric order of architecture, of quadrangular form, and of two storeys, and from its situation splendid views of the surrounding country can be obtained. There are two branch banks in the village. The distilling of whisky is carried on extensively in the parish, the Dailnaine distillery having made large additions to their premises during the present year (1892). Fairs are held on the first Thursday in April, and the third Thursday in May, and November (feinz). Acreage of the parish, 14,883. Population in 1881, 1,912; in 1891, 2,072, of which the village of Aberlour contained 1,011.

CRAIGELLACHIE is a pleasant village in the parish of and situated 2 miles N.E. from Aberlour. The Spey is here crossed by a handsome iron bridge of a single span of 150 feet, which was erected from designs by Telford, in 1815, at a cost of £8,000. From the bridge a fine view of the river is obtained. The Craigellachie Distillery was erected in 1890, and is now in full operation. This beautiful district is frequented by a large number of visitors during the summer season, and a new and commodious hotel (The Craigellachie) is at present (1892) in course of erection.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE GREAT NORTH OF SCOTLAND LINE.
 Station, ABERLOUR—John Davidson, station master [station master
 Station, CRAIGELLACHIE—Robert Taylor,

BANFF,

ALVAH, BOYNDIE, WHITEHILLS, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BANFF is a royal burgh, the capital of the county and of the parish of its name, 155 miles N. by E. of Edinburgh, 80 E. of Inverness, 46 N. by W. of Aberdeen, 85 E. of Elgin, 25 E. by N. of Fochabers, 13 E. of Cullen, and 8 E. by S. of Portsoy, pleasantly situated on the side of a hill overlooking the west bank of the Deveron and its confluence with the sea. This town was part of the ancient thanedom of Boin, whence the name seems to be derived, for in some old charters it is written Boineffe and Baineffe. Tradition says it was founded by Malcolm Canmore, in 1163; and it was erected into a royal burgh in 1372, by Robert II. who endowed it with the same privileges and placed it on the same footing as Aberdeen. It is governed by a provost, three bailies, and five councillors. The town council are also commissioners under the General Police and Improvement Act, which was adopted 1880. Banff and Macduff, in conjunction with Cullen, Elgin, Inverurie, Kintore, and Peterhead, return one member to Parliament. The gentleman at present sitting is Alexander Asher, Esq.

The town comprises several well-built streets, with handsome shops, and is remarkably clean and neat. From the sea it presents a very interesting appearance, and from any point of view may be regarded as lively and particularly cheerful. The principal street is ornamented with suitable county buildings and a modern town house, the latter surmounted by an elegant spire. An ornamental drinking fountain, presented by the town of Banff in memory of Walter Biggar, Esq., and Mrs. Ann Duff, his wife, adds to the picturesque of this part of the burgh. There are also a museum, and libraries. The Town and County Club opened in September, 1881, receives a fair share of patronage. A newspaper, the Banffshire Journal, with a large circulation, is published in the town. Two railways have their terminus in Banff, one from the south by way of Turfiff, the other from the west by Strathisla. The burgh boasts of one of the finest hotels (The Fife Arms), in the north.

The river Deveron, which abounds with salmon, is here crossed by a substantially-constructed bridge of seven arches, which gives access to the seaport of Macduff. From the bridge a fine view is obtained of Duff House, the seat of the Duke of Fife. This elegant mansion is partly in the Corinthian and partly in the composite style of architecture, and the front is elaborately decorated with sculpture. A wing has been added at an expense of about £4,000. The interior is replete with curiosities, and embellished with an extensive collection of paintings by the most celebrated foreign and British artists.

The inner harbour of Banff is secure, but has not a great depth of water. The outer basin, which is defended by a pier and breakwater, has a greater depth, and affords very good shelter. A Morton's patent slip apparatus is here fitted up, and is frequently in use. The port of Banff, which extends from Penan to Garmouth, stands sixth in the list of Scotch ports as regards tonnage of sailing ships. The number of vessels on the register is 69, the aggregate burden of which is about 10,200 tons, exclusive of fishing boats; but a number of other vessels trade to the port. The chief trade is of an export nature, and comprises salmon, herring and other fish. There are five branch banks. There is a large distillery, besides a brewery, and an extensive saw mill. An iron foundry has long been in operation, and does an extensive business. Ship building, rope and sail making, and tanning are also carried on.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a neat modern erection, with handsome spire; a Free church, and chapels belonging to Episcopalians, United Presbyterians, Roman Catholics, and Wesleyan Methodists. Chalmers' Hospital was founded in 1861, in terms of a bequest by the late Alexander Chalmers, of Clunie, long a merchant in the town of Banff, and is for the support, maintenance, cure, and relief of destitute, sick and diseased persons, of both sexes, born, domiciliated, and resident in any town or parish in the county of Banff; the inhabitants whereof shall make collections at their respective parish churches in aid of the funds of the hospital. It is adapted to accommodate fifty patients, with the requisite buildings for officials and attendants. A permanent revenue for the support of the hospital is derived from the rental of the land of Clunie and Knockorth. The building is situated in the seatown, and is an imposing erection. Banff academy once stood high as an educational institution, but since the Education Act, it has passed into the hands of the School Board. There are also two boarding establishments for young ladies. A castle of considerable strength and magnitude formerly raised its feudal battlements in the burgh, but of all that might convey a conception of its grandeur or importance, no vestige remains but part of the ancient wall, the moat, and traces of the entrenchments; a modern mansion now occupies part of the site. Edward I. visited Banff Castle on Sunday, the 22nd of July, 1296, after Balaol, King of Scotland, had surrendered to Edward, at Montrose, on the 7th July. After he had defeated Wallace at the battle of Falkirk, Edward again marched north and visited Banff Castle a second time, on the 4th September, 1298, and the public records show that it was the last stronghold possessed by the English north of the Grampians. The Castle thereafter became a constabulary, the residence of the king's representative or constable, who exercised judicial authority in the county. Dr. James Sharp, the celebrated Archbishop of St. Andrews, was born in Banff Castle in May 1618. The society of the place is polished and agreeable, while the size and position of the town place within reach of the inhabitants all the comforts of a city, with most of the privileges of rural life. The weekly corn and provision markets are held on Friday, Brandon fair on the last Fridays in May and November and the harvest feuing market on the second Friday of August, old style. Acreage of the parish, 6,217. In 1891 the burgh of Banff had a population of 3,871, and the parish 4,759.

ALVAH is a parish $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. of Banff. The river Deveron is here crossed by a bridge, erected in 1772 by the Earl of Fife. The parish is six miles long and three wide, and is for the most part fertile. There is a church of the Establishment. The hill of Alvah is a conspicuous landmark for this coast. Banff is the nearest railway station. Acreage of parish (including the detached portion of King Edward), 11,585. Population in 1891, 1,435.

WHITEHILLS is a village in the parish of BOYNDIE, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles W.N.W. of BANFF, chiefly inhabited by fishermen. The parish, which is five miles long by two wide, contains an Established church, a Free Church, and a Methodist chapel. The Banffshire Lunatic Asylum at Lady'sbridge, which was opened in May, 1865, and the interesting ruins of Boyne Castle are also in this parish. LADY'SBRIDGE is also a station on the Great North of Scotland railway, about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles from Whitehills. Acreage of Boynadie parish, 7,119. Population in 1891, of the parish 2,113, of Whitehills 1,097.

BUCKIE,

RATHVEN, PORT GORDON, PORTESSIE, ENZIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BUCKIE, which was established as a fishing village a little more than a century ago, has now grown to be among the largest and most important towns in the county of Banff. Its name, unlike most of the other places in the district, which are of Gaelic derivation, is obviously of German origin, being derived from Bucht—a bay. Situated as it is on the shore of Moray Frith, its name is accurately descriptive. It is in the parish of Rathven, 20 miles w. from Banff, the county town; 6 w. from Cullen, and 7 E. from Fochabers. Its population has been increasing steadily every decade; the last census (1891) having registered a total of 5,831. In the beginning of 1888 the General Police Act was adopted, and Easter Buckie or Buckie proper, and Buckpool are both included in the police burgh of Buckie. The town is divided by the burn, Buckie proper, of which the trustees of the late John Gordon, Esq., of Cluny, are the superiors, lying on the east, and Buckpool, of which Sir Robert G. Gordon, Bart., of Letterfourie, is superior, on the west of the said burn. The tenure under which property is held is mainly feu right. As might be expected from the origin of the town, and also its natural capabilities, fishing is the principal trade. The Buckie fishing district, comprising the neighbouring stations on the coast, ranks the foremost in the kingdom in respect of the number of boats owned and employed, and also in value. It is possessed of two harbours, the one in Buckpool, constructed about 30 years ago, at a cost of £18,000. Two-thirds of this amount was contributed by the Board of Fisheries, and the other third by Sir Robert G. Gordon. The other harbour, which was commenced in 1874, was built at the sole expense of the late John Gordon, Esq., of Cluny, at a cost of about £70,000. For depth of water and other capabilities this harbour is allowed to be the finest in all the Moray Frith. It is made of concrete, and is in all respects admirably and strongly constructed. D. Cunningham, Esq. C.E. Dundee, was the engineer. A number of curing stations and other stores have been erected by the Cluny Trustees, and are all occupied. There is now a steamer service from Leith and Aberdeen to Buckie and other Moray Frith ports, which has already developed a good trade. The Great North of Scotland and Highland Railway Companies have each stations here. Approached either by sea or land this town presents an imposing appearance, possessed as it is of such fine ecclesiastical buildings. First and foremost is the Roman Catholic chapel with its two spires, the new Established church with its crowned tower, the Free and Episcopalian chapels both with elegant spires, besides the U. P. church, which is a substantial building. The Masonic and Literary Institute in Cluny place, which was opened in 1891, was erected at a cost of about £2,000; it contains a council room, reading room, library, museum, billiard room, &c. There are two good hotels in the town. The houses generally are of a good and substantial character, and besides a number of handsome private buildings, the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank, Limited, occupy respectively first-class and modern buildings. Besides the fish curing trade there are other industries springing up. There are net and rope manufactory and steam saw mills, and at Inchgowie is a large distillery, of which Messrs. Alexander Wilson & Co. are the proprietors.

PORT GORDON is a village on the coast, and a station on the Great North of Scotland railway, about 2 miles w. from Buckie. Its inhabitants are exclusively occupied in fishing and the ship coasting trade; they employ stake and bag nets for the capture of salmon, which are here abundant, being in the immediate vicinage of Speymouth. A large quantity of corn was formerly shipped annually from this port. The harbour is commodious, and the greater part is built of Portland cement concrete, at the sole expense of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon. A narrow rivulet separates this village from PORT TANNACHY. Population in 1881, 1,132, and in 1891, 1,255.

PORTESSIE is a small coast village, and a station on the Great North of Scotland railway, about a mile E. from Buckie; it is of some consequence as a boat building and fishing station. Population in 1881, 1,061, and in 1891, 941.

The parish of RATHVEN extends about 10 miles along the coast of the Moray Frith, by from three to five in breadth. The greater portion of the land is hilly, but the more level parts near the sea are arable and fertile, being greatly enriched by sea manure, and in some parts the eye is relieved by the appearance of thriving plantations. Throughout the district the supply of limestone, sandstone and slate is abundant, and the memorials of antiquity are numerous, the Danish "cairn" being the most general. Acreage, 23,551. The population of the entire parish of Rathven in 1881 was 11,140, and in 1891, 12,912.

ENZIE is a quoad sacra parish, 8 miles S.W. of Buckie. The parish is partly in Rathven and partly in Bellic. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and two Roman Catholic chapels are the places of worship. There is a station here on the Highland railway. Population of the parish in 1881, 2,108, and in 1891, 2,460.

CULLEN AND DESKFORD,

AND THE VILLAGES OF PORTNOCKIE FINDOCHTY AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CULLEN is a royal burgh, a maritime town, and the capital of the parish of its name, 191 miles N.N.E. of Edinburgh, 22 E. of Elgin, 13 N.E. of Fochabers, 14 W. of Banff, and 6 W. of Portsoy; situated on a commanding eminence overlooking the Moray Frith. Formerly it consisted of two distinct towns—the New Town and the Old Town, but between 1820-30 the latter was wholly removed from its site adjacent to Cullen House to its present position, the church alone remaining. The town, which presents an aspect of neatness and respectability, is indebted to the Seafield family for many of its improvements. The Great North of Scotland (Buckie Extension) Railway passes through the burgh. To the west of the station the railway is carried over the town by a series of arches which terminate in a viaduct of eight arches between seventy and eighty feet high. The viaduct spans the mouth of Cullen burn, separating the parishes of Cullen and Rathven.

The Established church is a pre-Reformation building of much interest, with a history dating back upwards of six centuries. It contains numerous ancient monuments and inscriptions in an excellent state of preservation. There are also Free and United Presbyterian churches, the former built in 1844, and the latter in 1882. In 1876 a Board school was erected at a cost of £2,500. The curing of fish and its exportation is carried on by several of the inhabitants. There are also branches of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, a brewery, and two good hotels. The acting magistrates are the provost, two bailies, and nine councillors. A justice of the peace small debt court is held on the first Tuesday in every month.

The burgh joins with Banff, Elgin, Inverurie, Kintore and Peterhead in returning a member to Parliament. The gentleman at present sitting is Alexander Asher, Esq. Cullen House is an ancient and irregular edifice; the interior is, however, furnished with modern taste, and adorned with paintings by the most eminent masters. Cullen stream passes under the south walls; and on the opposite side are the park and pleasure grounds, which are connected with the house by an elegant arch of eighty-four feet span. Not far distant are the ruins of a dwelling in which Elizabeth, queen of Robert Bruce, is said to have died. An eminence, called Castle Hill, at the western extremity of the town, is the site of an ancient fortification, which must formerly have been a place of great strength. An almost perpendicular rock renders it inaccessible from the north, and it is surrounded in every other direction by a deep ditch. It is supposed to have been destroyed by fire, as vitrified stones have been frequently extracted from beneath the surface. The ruins of Findlater Castle, a building of great antiquity, are situated about two miles E. of Cullen. A fair is held on the third Friday in May. In 1881 the parish of Cullen, the area of which is 925 acres, had a population of 2,236, and in 1891, 2,319, of which the town contained 2,100.

DESKFORD, a parish lying between Cullen and Grange, four miles S. from the former place, is five miles in length by three in breadth. The ruins of Deskford Tower, the Castle of Inaltrie, and a pre-Reformation church are in this parish. The places of worship are a new parish church and a Free church, and in the village are Board SCHOOLS. Tochiencal is the nearest railway station, $3\frac{1}{4}$ miles distant. Acreage, 8,170. Population in 1881, 849, and in 1891, 745.

PORTKNOCKIE is a fishing village within the royalty of Cullen, in the parish of Rathven, two miles W.N.W. from Cullen. It is situated on Moray Firth, and contains an e-tablished church, erected in 1838, a Free church, and a public school. The district was erected into a quoad sacra parish, with the designation of Seafield parish in 1885. A deep water harbour was completed in 1891. The Great North of Scotland Railway has a station here. Population in 1881, 1,118, and in 1891, 1,306.

FINDOCHTY is also a small fishing village in the same parish as Portknockie, four miles W. from Cullen, and is a station on the Great North of Scotland Railway. A harbour has been constructed here at a cost of £10,000. The places of worship are a United Presbyterian church and a Wesleyan chapel. There is also a Board school. In the neighbourhood are the ruins of the Castle of Findochty, the ancient residence of the family of Ord. Population in 1881, 986, and in 1891, 1,148.

DUFFTOWN IN MORTLACH,

GLENRRINNES, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUFFTOWN, a village, founded in 1817, was created a police burgh under the "General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act" in 1863, being the year after that Act became law. The burgh is in the parish of Mortlach, and is 118 miles N. of Edinburgh, 52 N.W. of Aberdeen, 30 S.W. of Banff, 14 N.E. of Inveravon, 10 S.W. of Keith, and 6 S.E. of Aberdeen, situated a short way to the north of the old decayed haule of Mortlach, near the junction of the Dull and the Findochty waters. This place is improving in appearance, under the auspices of its patrons, the Duke of Fife and the Duke of Richmond and Gordon, the former having in 1881 carried out a thorough system of drainage at a cost of about £700. New streets are being opened up, and a large number of feus have been taken, several of which have been built upon. The village is formed with a square in its centre, from which streets diverge from each side. In the centre of the square stands a large square tower of considerable height, with four Gothic turrets on the corners, surmounted with a belfry containing one bell. It was formerly used as a gaol, and contains a good clock with four dials, which adds greatly to the appearance of the place. During the summer months it is much frequented by visitors, on account of its healthy situation and the beautiful scenery in and around its vicinity. There are two hotels, viz., the Fife Arms and the Commercial, the former of long standing. An extensive trade in lime is carried on by the Tinniver and Richmond Lime Co., and there are four distilleries, the Glenduff distillery being under the proprietorship of Messrs. William Grant & Sons, the Mortlach distillery under that of Mr. George Cowie, the Balvenie distillery Messrs. W. and J. Grant, and the Parkmore distillery Messrs. James Watson & Co. There are two branch banks, viz., the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. A commodious Masonic Hall was built in 1887, which is also used for meetings, &c. A sheriff court for small debt cases is held four times a year, in January, April, July and October, as fixed by the sheriff.

The places of worship comprise a church of the Establishment, which is of very ancient date, and a Free Church. A beautiful stained glass window, 15 ft. square, presented by Lord Mount Stephen, and a tower surmounted by a steeple were added in 1891, when the latter church was enlarged and remodelled. There are likewise an Episcopal church, a neat edifice pleasantly situated, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The Stephen Cottage Hospital was founded in 1889 by Lord Mount Stephen, of Montreal and London, a native of Dufftown; it is beautifully equipped, £2,500 having been expended on its erection. The endowment fund is £5,500, and it is open to the inhabitants of Mortlach and Glenrinnies. The parish is famous as the scene of the signal victory gained over the Danes by Malcolm II., in 1010, which was fought a few hundred yards south-west of Balvenie Castle. The district also possesses the ruins of Auchindoun Castle and Balvenie Castle, before mentioned. A cattle market is held on the fourth Thursday of every month, and Feeding markets the third Wednesday in May, the second Wednesday in July, and the third Wednesday in November. Population of the parish of Mortlach in 1881, 2,934; and in 1891, 2,754, of which Dufftown contained 1,469.

GLENRRINNES is a quoad sacra parish, formed in 1855, and comprises part of Mortlach and part of Aberdeen. There is an Established church, built in 1884, about the centre of the parish, 5½ miles from Dufftown, and a good public school. The nearest station is at Dufftown. It is also a registration district. Population in 1881, 401; and in 1891, 374.

INVERAVON,

BALLINDALLOCH, GLENLIVET, AND DRUMIN.

INVERAVON is a parish on the banks of the river Avon, lying chiefly in Banffshire, a small portion being in the county of Elgin. It is about 42 miles s. w. of Banff, 8 s. w. of Aberlour, 22 s. w.
of Keith. 14 s. of Rothies, 22 s. by w. of Fochabers, and 22 s. of Elgin. Besides the Avon and the Spey, it is watered by the Livet.
The surface is irregular, but cannot be described as mountainous.
except the lofty region of Ben Rinnes, which is mostly in this parish, and abounds in grouse.

The district of GLENLIVET (formed a quoad sacra parish in 1865) is remarkably fertile, and noted for the excellence of whisky, for the manufacture of which there is The Glenlivet Distillery, of which Messrs. George and John Gordon Smith are the proprietors. There are also two other distilleries in the parish, viz. Cragganmore and Glenfarclas. The sides of the river are shaded with copses of birch and alder, and on the banks of the Spey there is a considerable extent of oak.

BALLINDALLOCH, the elegant mansion of Sir George M'Pherson Grant, D.L., J.P. is pleasantly situated at the confluence of the Avon and Spey. A dilapidated castle is among the remains of antiquity.
A church of the Establishment, a quoad sacra church at Glenlivet, a Free church, and two Roman Catholic chapels are the places of worship within the parish.

Cattle markets are held at Inveravon on the Tuesday before the 26th of May and 26th of July (also grain and feeding), and at Glenlivet on the fourth Wednesday from October to May inclusive. Acreage, 48,971. Population in 1831, 2,568, and in 1891, 2,319, of which Glen-livet contained 1,477.

KEITH,

BOTRIPTHIE, NEWMILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KEITH is a market and post town and parish—the latter chiefly in the county of Banff, but extending into that of Moray. The town is 170 miles N. of Edinburgh, 20 S.W. of Banff, 17 E.S.E. of Elgin, 50 N.E. of Aberdeen, 50 E. of Inverness, 8 S.E. of Forchabers, 17 S.S.W. of Portsoy, and 12 S. of Cullen; situate on the banks of the Isla, in the centre of an amphitheatre of hills. It is divided into three distinct towns, namely—Old Keith, New Keith, and Fife Keith; the latter, erected by the Earl of Fife, is separated from Old and New Keith by the Isla. The old town has declined considerably since the establishment of the new. New Keith was begun about the year 1750, by the Earl of Findlater, upon a barren tract of land, fenced off in tenements of fifteen yards by sixty. It is formed on a regular plan of three parallel streets and a square; in the principal street there are many good shops and hotels. There are no authentic documents to record the origin of Old Keith, but it has certainly existed upwards of six centuries, and was at one time the county town. The Court of Registry possessed an extensive jurisdiction, including four places of the Crown. The last criminal hanging was Gilbert Dalloch, condemned for theft, about 1690. On the banks of the Isla, a little below the town, are the ruins of a castle, which belonged to the Oliphant family. Tradition says that part of the castle was built overhanging a deep pool in the river at the foot of a small waterfall, into which this part fell. Further up the river is an old bridge, well worth a visit. Keith was noted for the great annual fair which lasted a week, about the middle of September. Traders from Glasgow and Dundee, and the south generally, were met there by all their customers from the northerly parts of the kingdom, including the Orkney Islands, to settle past and arrange future transactions. The number of horses and cattle was very great, and even yet the horse market in September is one of the largest in the north. The Suit-Roll-Croft on the banks of the Isla, near Keith, was the gathering place of the Clan Gordon; Sutherland House, Fife Keith, now marks the gathering place. Keith was the birth place of Ferguson, the astronomer. On the Caird's Hill, denoting the "hill of friends," are remains of a Druidical temple, near which several tumuli have been opened, and found to contain various sepulchral remains. Tradition relates that an encounter took place in Old Keith, upwards of one hundred and fifty years ago, between Mr. Gordon, of Glengarick, and Peter Roy M'Gregor, the leader of a band of freebooters, who, after a desperate resistance, was defeated, himself taken prisoner, and his gang destroyed. The extensive manufactory belonging to Messrs. G. & G. Kynoch, for the manufacture of Scotch tweeds, gives employment to a considerable number of hands. In addition there are two large flour and meal mills, manure manufactories, two extensive distilleries, and a brewery in the Old Town. Three branches of the respective establishments of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited, are in operation here, the latter having also a branch in Fife Keith.

The present established church was opened for public worship in 1819; it is an elegant and commodious edifice, in the neat modern Gothic style of architecture, with accommodation for a congregation of 1,800, and is considered one of the handsomest churches in the North of Scotland. The Episcopalians, a Free Church community, the United Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics have each a place of worship. There is also a public reading room and library, in the former of which the principal daily papers and leading periodicals are taken, while the library contains a number of useful and instructive books; a chess room is attached to the reading room for members. A sheriff court for small debt and debt recovery cases, and for proofs in ordinary actions and other business, is held once a month in Longmore Hall. The market stance is held at the south end of the town, and is of considerable extent. Markets are held on the first Friday in each month, except June and September when they are held on the third Wednesday, and fairs in March, May, July (harvest), and November. The parish, which embraces an area of 18,195 statute acres, contained in 1881 a population of 6,996, and in 1891, 7,239.

BOTRIPTHIE, a parish in Banffshire, and the seat of a presbytery is situated about 4 miles S. of Keith town; it extends across the whole county, from Aberdeenshire on the east to Elginshire on the west, having an average breadth of about three miles, and enclosing an area of 9,459 statute acres; the soil for the most part is arable, and generally speaking, fertile. Population in 1881, 696, and in 1891, 729.

NEWMILL is a village in the parish of Keith, one mile from that town. A handsome church and manse in connection with the Establishment were built in 1870. Newmill with the neighbouring district was erected into a quoad sacra parish in 1867. It has also a Free Church mission hall. Population in 1881, 651.

KIRKMICHAEL,

AND THE VILLAGE OF TOMINTOUL.

KIRKMICHAEL is a large parish, occupying the upper extremity of the county from beyond the mountain of Cairngorm, to near the confluence of the Livet with the Avon, a distance of 25 miles, by a breadth of from three to six miles, and encloses an area of 75,759 statute acres. The Duke of Richmond and Col. John Gordon Smith, J.P. of Delnabo are heritors. The church of the parish is situated in TOMINTOUL, a village in which are also two public schools, and a place of worship each for the Established and Free Church communities and Roman Catholics. The Richmond Arms in the village is an excellent and well-conducted inn and posting house. The population of the parish of Kirk Michael was, by the return for 1881, 1,073, and in 1891, 1,044; of this number Tomintoul contained 510.

MACDUFF,

GARDENSTOWN, CROVIE, AND THE PARISH OF GAMRIE.

MACDUFF is a seaport town, in the parish of Gamrie, situated about a mile east from the town of Banff, on the opposite side of the Deveron river, and on the declivity of a hill descending towards the sea shore. The town, which forms a portion of the parliamentary burgh of Banff, is governed by a provost, bailies, council and police commissioners, and has risen, since the early part of the eighteenth century, from being little more than the hutage of a few fishermen, to a place of respectable size and trade. It is built on the property of the Duke of Fife, whose fine seat lies in the neighbourhood; and to a nobleman of this name it is indebted for its chief improvements and prosperity. Through his influence it was created a burgh of barony by George III., in 1783, when its name was altered from Down to its present appellation. It has from that period increased in extent and consequence. It contains three churches, Board schools, and a school for poor children of both sexes—the latter called the "Murray Institution," from its having been founded by a Mr. Murray, of London, a canvas manufacturer, and a native of Macduff, in 1849. This school has been transferred to the School Board in virtue of a scheme made under the provision of the Educational Endowments (Scotland) Act, which also provides for the administration of the funds of the institution, which amount to about £6,000. A town hall has been built by voluntary subscription, at a cost of £2,100. The church occupies a conspicuous position on an eminence, and the Duke of Fife has ornamented its precincts with a cross, which is highly effective at a little distance. The same nobleman has munificently expended a vast sum in the erection and improvement of the harbour, which is now considered one of the best on the Moray Frith. As a station for the herring fishery, it is exceedingly valuable, a great supply of that fish being obtained and shipped from this port. There are two branch banking establishments—the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. The greater portion of the grain produced for twenty miles east of Macduff is exported hence, as are salmon, cod and herring; and the country inland is supplied from here with coal, bone manure, and lime. Several vessels trade with the Baltic, the number of fishing boats is very considerable, and in the curing of fish there are some thriving establishments, and many of the inhabitants obtain in this branch comfortable and lucrative employment. The Turfiff and Macduff section of the Great North of Scotland railway terminates here. Population in 1881, 3,641, and in 1891, 3,707.

GARDENSTOWN is also a small seaport and fishing village of very romantic appearance, in the same parish, but was made a quoad sacra parish in 1885; it is 8½ miles E. of Banff, and 14 W. of Fraserburgh. Established and United Presbyterian churches are in the village. The nearest station is at Macduff, 7½ miles distant. Population in 1881, 871, and in 1891, 1,118.

CROVIE is a small fishing village, situated one mile E. of Gardenstown. Macduff is the nearest railway station, 8 miles distant. Population in 1891, 298.

The parish of GAMRIE extends about eleven miles, by an average breadth of about two and a half, and embraces an area of 17,293 acres. The coast is bold and precipitous and indented with caverns. The land is partly under tillage and partly in pasture. The places of worship are Established and Free churches, and there are also public schools. Macduff is the nearest railway station, 7 miles distant. Population of the whole parish in 1891, 7,030.

PORTSOY AND FORDYCE.

PORTSOY is a seaport in the parish of Fordyce, 178 miles N. of Edinburgh, 82 E. by N. of Inverness, 18 E.N.E. of Fochabers, and 8 W. by N. of Banff, and is a station on the Great North of Scotland railway, situated on a tongue of land projecting into the Moray Frith, at the head of one of those little bays by which this part of the coast is in many places indented. It was erected into a burgh of barony about the sixteenth century, by the Baron of Boyne, whose descendants embracing the fortunes of the Pretender in 1715, forfeited their lands to the Crown. They were subsequently granted to the Earl of Findlater and Seafield, and are still in the possession of that family. The town is small and irregularly built, but, as a port, is in a thriving condition. The point of land on which it stands forms a safe harbour, sufficiently deep to moor vessels of upwards of 100 tons burthen. Besides the proceeds of the herring fishery, which has been greatly extended of late years, it has a considerable trade in the exportation of grain and stone, and the importation of coal. Fish curing and distilling are prominent branches among the general domestic business, which, combined with the income resulting from the traffic of its ports, has elevated Portsoy into a position of some consequence as a commercial town. The stone raised from the quarries of this district (which has obtained the name of "Portsoy marble"), is a beautiful mixture of red, green, and white accumulations, and is wrought into tea cups, vases, and small ornaments, chimney-pieces, &c. Some singular specimens of schistose, and a species of asbestos of a greenish hue are met with in this neighbourhood; but the most remarkable mineral production is a granite, of a buff or flesh colour, which, except here and in Arabia, has not been discovered throughout the world. This district also abounds with excellent limestone. The town adopted the General Police and Improvements Act on October 8th, 1889, the number of commissioners being nine. The Dowager Countess of Seafield is superior. The extensive ruins of the old Castles of Boyne and Findlater, lying to the east and west of Portsoy, possess great attractions for the antiquary and pleasure seeker.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, erected in 1816, at a cost of £2,000, and restored in 1881; a Free church, built in 1844, at an expense of £1,800, and rebuilt in 1871; an Episcopal church, constructed in 1840, at an expenditure of £2,480; a United Presbyterian church, built in 1866, at a cost of £830; and a chapel for Roman Catholics, erected in 1828. Board schools were built in 1877, at a cost of £2,818, and in 1887 an additional sum of £497 was expended on them. There is a Christian Institute in the town, in connection with which is a library, available to the members free and to the community at a low charge. The library contains about 1,000 volumes, the various departments being well represented. Population in 1881, 2,312, and in 1891, 2,060.

The parish of FORDYCE is of great antiquity. The village is situated about 3 miles W. by S. from Portsoy. There are Established and Free churches in the village, the first named built in 1806, and the latter in 1843. Large Board schools were erected in 1881-82, at an expense of £1,889, at which there are a number of bursaries in the gift of the Seafield family, tenable by boys for five years with four years in addition at Aberdeen University. At what was formerly the old parochial school the late Sir James Clark, Bart., physician in ordinary to Her Majesty, and the late John Forbes, Esq., physician extraordinary to his late Royal Highness the Prince Consort, received the early part of their education. The most remarkable remnant of antiquity in the village is a large castellated building, standing on the east side of The Square, and bearing the date of 1592. It originally belonged to the Durn family, but is now the property of the house of Seafield. SANDEND is a small fishing village in this parish, situated about 3 miles W. of Portsoy. The nearest station is Glassaugh, about a mile distant from the village of Fordyce and the same from Sandend. Acreage of the parish, 17,198. Population in 1881, 4,289, and in 1891, 4,277, of which the village contained 316 and Sandend 299.

BERWICKSHIRE.

THIS is the most south-easterly county of Scotland, and is bounded on the east by the North Sea and on the west by the counties of Edinburgh and Roxburgh; on the north the range of Lammermoor hills separates it from the county of Haddington, and on the south it is bordered by Northumberland and Roxburghshire, from which counties it is divided by the river Tweed. Its form is an irregular oblong square, measuring from east to west thirty-five miles, and from north to south twenty-two, and its area comprises 294,805 statute acres, or 460 square miles. In point of size Berwick ranks as the twentieth Scottish county, and in population as the twenty-fifth.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the period of the Roman invasion Berwickshire was inhabited by tribes of British called Otadini; and it was subsequently overrun by bands of Saxons, who engrafted their language and manners on those of the original inhabitants. The conquests by these foreigners extended a considerable way along the shores to the east and west; and in the course of time they gave the land of which they thus possessed themselves the title of Lothian, which it still retains in the western division. The entire area of Berwickshire was comprised in this Saxon territory, which was distinguished by the name of Saxonia, superseding its previous designation Bernicio. Until the year 1020, this district of country was included within the kingdom of Northumberland; and in that year it was ceded to King Malcolm II. by Cospatrik, Earl of Northumberland, who settled in Scotland and was created Earl of Dunbar. About the beginning of the eleventh century, many Norman and Anglo-Saxon families settled in Berwickshire, as well as other parts of Scotland, and were the founders of a number of noble houses still ranked in the peerage of the country. It appears likewise that the town of Berwick became a settlement of Flemish and other foreign tradesmen; and it is recorded as a fact that at Berwick originated those laws which were framed and applied in Scotland for the regulation of burghs and their guild associations. Being the threshold of the Scottish kingdom on entering from England, Berwickshire suffered in the succeeding centuries in all the wars between the two hostile nations, and was occasionally involved in jurisdictional disputes with its ecclesiastical neighbour, the Palatine Bishop of Durham, and Berwick and the bridges across the Tweed were in general the main objects of contention. The description of Berwick will be found under the more appropriate head of the town. From the variety of successes and disasters which Berwick underwent for so many centuries, and from its successive occupation by different mixed nations, the people of this part of North Britain have not that distinct Scottish character so directly recognised in places more distant from the frontier. By their language and personal appearance, especially the former, the inhabitants of Berwick and its neighbourhood are easily particularised, and, in common with the Northumbrians, they speak with that remarkable bur which is found nowhere else in the kingdom. The women are famed for their beauty—the men for their gallant bearing in times of warlike strife. The “Men of Merse” distinguished themselves at Flodden and other bloody fields, under the command of Lord Home; and there is a tradition that a party, led to the Holy Land by some of their feudal chiefs, obtained on its ensanguined plains the highest honours for their unconquerable intrepidity. When Charles I. paid his first visit to Scotland, in the year 1633, Lord Home met him at Berwick with a train of six hundred Merse gentlemen, “gallantly arrayed” on horseback. The present generation has seen that the yeomanry of the Merse have lost no portion of the military spirit of their ancestors.

SURFACE, SOIL, &c.—Berwickshire is divided into three districts, namely Merse, Lammermoor (or Lammermuir), and Lauderdale; the Merse, so called from the word march, or boundary, is the largest and most valuable district, occasionally giving name to the whole county, and embracing that tract of low land between the Lammermoor hills on the north and the river Tweed on the south, having Lauderdale for its western boundary. It is the most compact and extensive piece of level ground in Scotland, comprising 130,000 statute acres; in appearance it resembles a wide-spread portion of some of the English fertile counties, and being well enclosed and enriched with trees and plantations, when viewed from one of the gentle eminences which its surface occasionally presents, it looks like a vast garden. Lammermoor, which consists of nearly 90,000 statute acres, is a highly pastoral district, with generally a wild brown aspect, and runs on the northern border of the Merse, so as effectually to divide the fine vales of Edinburgh and Haddington shires from the beautiful valley of the Tweed. But for this chain of blackish obstructive hills, the prospect from Edinburgh would be carried the length of the Cheviots. The district of Lauderdale, which has received this title from the Leader water, along whose bank it ranges, is a mixture of hill and dale, the land in the valleys being essentially arable; this portion of the county contains about 67,000 statute acres. The eminences of Berwickshire are not of such magnitude or interest as to require particular description; those of the greatest altitude above the level of the sea are—Souter Hill, 1,716 feet; Crib Law, 1,615; Clint Hill, 1,644; Meikleless Law, on the border of Haddingtonshire, 1,581; Tippet Knowes, 1,923; Dirrington Law, 1,809; and Twin Law, 1,260.

PRODUCE, MINERALS, MANUFACTURES, &c.—Within the last century very great exertions have been made to improve the agricultural character of the county, and in this respect it differs nothing from the neighbouring territory of East Lothian; the county is thickly, but not redundantly, populated with a most intelligent, active peasantry and farming class. The exports of Berwickshire consist of great quantities of corn, coal, sheep and eggs; and these, indeed, may be considered as the extent of its commerce. Minute investigation has failed in discovering minerals or fossils in sufficient supply to be of great or general benefit, although some coal exists in the vicinity of Berwick, and in the parishes of Mordington and Cockburnspath; and limestone is, almost consequently, found in its proximity. Marl and gypsum have likewise been raised, and freestone and whinstone of various kinds exist in several parts of the shire. As coal is introduced from Durham, by an easy land carriage, the district of the Merse does not feel the absence of that valuable fuel very severely; but in some other parts of the shire, as throughout the upper portion of the vale of Tweed, this article is dear. Berwickshire is strictly pastoral and agricultural; the principal crops are wheat, barley, oats, beans and turnips, the latter being extensively cultivated. Manufactures as yet have made little or no progress within its borders; what is connected with this system of industry finds its chief seat at the principal town, Berwick. Paper is made at Chirnside Bridge, and the manufacture of woollens is carried on at Erieston and Cumledge. The herring fishery, which is pursued at Eyemouth and other ports, is a profitable industry, as is also the curing of this fish.

RIVERS AND RAILWAYS.—The waters of this county flow in general either to the south or north-east. The Tweed, which is an imposing stream, and the most lovely of Scottish rivers, from its sparkling clearness and soft sylvan banks, receives all the currents that are poured down from the northern eminences; it is not susceptible of navigation, but is of great value from its salmon fisheries, which are under a strict system of water police. The Leader, the Eden, and the united streams of the Blackadder and the Whitadder course into the Tweed. The Eye is the only other river; it falls into the sea at Eyemouth. The Eden, which runs southwards from Lammermoor, has a remarkable fall, near the house of Newton Don, of about forty feet, exhibiting a fine appearance when there is a flood. It is a peculiarity of the Blackadder that no salmon can live in it; if any happen to enter they are said to die in a few days, though they are caught plentifully in the Whitadder, which also abounds with trout, &c. The principal lines of railway in this county are the North British and its many branches, and the North-Eastern. The northern extremity of the North-Eastern Railway is at Berwick; and here the magnificent Tweed viaduct connects that line with the North British, and forms with other railways an uninterrupted communication from London to Aberdeen.—See the town of BERWICK for a more detailed account of the viaduct.

DIVISIONS AND REPRESENTATION.—Berwickshire comprehends (exclusive of Berwick town) thirty-three parishes and two parts of parishes; and contains one royal burgh, Lauder, which until the passing of the Redistribution Bill joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Jedburgh in returning one member to the Senate, but was then merged in the county. Berwick-on-Tweed, which is a municipal burgh, and formerly sent two representatives to Parliament, is not classed as an integral portion of the shire, and when the bill above alluded to was passed, the town was included in the Berwick-on-Tweed division of Northumberland. The present member for the county is the Right Hon. Edward Marjoribanks. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92 was 5,644. The lord lieutenant of the county is the Earl of Lauderdale. By the returns presented to Government in 1881, the entire county of Berwick contained a population of 85,892, and by those for 1891, 82,898. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was (exclusive of railways) £301,118, and the valuation of railways, £21,470.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED,

ANCROFT, NORHAM, SCREMERSTON, SPITTAL, TWEEDMOUTH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED (so denominated to distinguish it from North Berwick, in East Lothian, and several Berwicks in England) is a corporate borough and seaport, 334 miles N. by W. from London, 64 N. by W. from Newcastle-upon-Tyne, and 49 N. from Morpeth; from the city of Edinburgh it is distant 58 miles S.E. (by rail), and from Glasgow 103 E. by S. It is a town of considerable importance, of Saxon or Teutonic origin. The etymology of its name is as doubtful as the period of its establishment is obscure. Maitland, the historian of Edinburgh, entered into a dissertation to prove that the title was transferred by the Saxon founders from a town of note of the same name in their own country—in the like manner as European emigrants designate cities and towns on the continent of America; others, and among them Camden, allege that the word Berwick is deduced from Berwica, signifying "a village belonging to a manor;" while a third party, with more feasibility, derive it from bar and wick, "a castle on the bend of a river." Berwick was fortified and defended by a garrison at a very remote period of British history; it became the chief town of the district, and was the centre, on various occasions, of many important transactions. It stands on the north side of the river Tweed, about half a mile from the spot where that stream empties itself into Berwick bay. Prior to the year 1551, Berwick was alternately in the hands of the English and Scotch, but it was then erected into a free burgh or distinct liberty, in some measure independent of either kingdom, having a small district attached to it, called "Berwick bounds," stretching about three miles north, and the like distance up the Tweed. It may be added that it is described as a large and populous town so early as the reign of David I. of Scotland. It continued in the possession of the Saxons for some ages, and subsequently was held by the Danes, until the Scottish king Gregory, contemporary with Alfred the Great, took it by assault. Malcolm of Scotland having defeated the Northumbrians in the year 1018, became possessed of all the Lothians down to the Tweed, after which time Berwick remained in Scotch hands till 1296, when it was re-taken by Edward I. During this period it rose to be a town of the greatest importance, being second only to London. About the year 1098 Berwick was annexed to the see of Durham by Edgar; but the gift was soon after resumed, in consequence of the ingratitude of Ralph Flambert, who had been consecrated bishop of that see. William I. of Scotland, who in 1147 had joined Henry's three sons in rebellion, was taken prisoner near Alnwick, and conducted in chains before Henry, who obliged him to pay homage for the whole of Scotland, and as a security he was forced to deliver up the fort of Berwick, together with all the principal forts of Scotland. In 1291 the states of England and Scotland, with Edward I., assembled at Berwick to determine the claims of Robert Bruce and John Balliol to the Scottish crown, when, after numerous conferences, on the 17th November in the following year, the king appointed John Balliol successor to the crown.

The town is surrounded by regular fortifications, the old line of which extended 2 miles 282 yards, the present walls, built in the time of Queen Elizabeth, are only about one mile and a third in length, and at the present time form an excellent promenade entirely round the town. Berwick was formerly the principal town of the kingdom of Merse, it stands on a gentle declivity at a short distance from the sea; a ditch aided its defence on the north-east, and the river served for a moat on the south side. The ancient castle, of which there are only a few remains, must have been of great strength, and is now merely an attractive object to the antiquary. Berwick, in modern days, is of considerable consequence. It is a regular well-built town, joined to England by a fine bridge of heavy stone, of fifteen spacious and elegant arches; the whole length of the bridge is 1,164 feet, and its width is 17 feet. It was commenced in 1610, in the reign of James I., and finished in 1634, in the reign of Charles I., at a cost of £15,000—a heavy sum at that period. About a quarter of a mile higher up the river is the railway viaduct, known as the "Royal Border Bridge," opened by Her Majesty and the late Prince Albert on the 29th August, 1850. This magnificent structure spans the broad valley of the Tweed, and completes an important link in the chain of railway communication between London and Edinburgh by the north-east coast. It forms the northern extremity of the North-Eastern Railway; and in magnitude of construction and grandeur of design is, perhaps, one of the most remarkable architectural achievements of modern times. The foundation stone of this noble structure was laid on the 15th May, 1847, without any public ceremony. The viaduct consists of 25 circular arches, each 61 feet 6 inches span, springing from lofty piers 8 feet 6 inches broad at the narrowest point. One half of the arches span the river—here a broad and beautiful stream—and the remainder are built on the neighbouring land south of the Tweed. The total length of the bridge is 2,160 feet, and its greatest height from the bed of the river 128 feet 6 inches, including the parapets; its breadth between the parapets is 24 feet, allowing a double line of rails to be laid. The viaduct is built entirely of stone, with the exception of the inner part of the arches, which is brick laid in cement. There are about one million and a half cubic feet of masonry in the structure, and two millions and a half of bricks have been placed in the arches. The design of the bridge is elegant, and the parapets are adorned on the outside by miniature corbelled arches. The piers of the bridge, which are protected by handsome cutwaters, are curved up perpendicularly, and are narrowed near the spring of the arch by means of offsets. The parapets and springs of the arches are of polished stone, but the rest of the masonry is only rough-hewn. The appearance of the arches is extremely graceful. When one-half of the arches had been erected, it was considered desirable for the accommodation of the traffic to erect a temporary bridge across the river, without waiting the completion of the stone viaduct so as to avoid the uncertainty of the river operations. The quantity of timber used in the construction of the stone and timber bridges was not less than 800,000 cubic feet. The large embankment at the south end of the bridge, five-eighths of a mile in length, and in some places 60 feet high, completes the junction of the Tweedmouth with the Berwick station. The entire cost of the viaduct, amounting to about £120,000, was borne by the York, Newcastle and Berwick Railway Company, now the North-Eastern. The Tweed viaduct is one of the largest stone viaducts in the kingdom. The last arch of this magnificent bridge was keyed on the 26th March, 1850, by the wife of the resident engineer. The greatest depth of the water at high tide is 23 feet. The pier, the construction of which was finished in 1810, at a cost of £40,000, is worthy of note; it stretches a great distance into the sea, and forms a fine breakwater, the lighthouse being situate at the extreme end; the pier affords a fine and salubrious promenade.

The country round here is generally flat, but well suited to agricultural purposes, and some fine views are to be obtained about the town and district. The exportation of coal from the mines in the neighbourhood forms an important feature in the commerce of the port, while that of grain, manure, and salmon caught in the Tweed (the latter sent to the London markets), is nearly equally profitable. The principal fishing stations are from the mouth of the river to Norham, a distance of seven miles. The season commences on the 15th February, and terminates on the 14th September. The port has the privilege of the Warehousing Act, passed the 6th of George IV., and is now a bonded port for the reception of wines and colonial produce. Five newspapers are published here, viz.—the Berwick Advertiser, the Border Counties Gazette, and Berwickshire Gazette on Friday; the Berwick Journal on Thursday; and the Berwickshire News on Tuesday. There are five branch banks, viz.: Messrs. Woods & Co. the North-Eastern (late Alnwick and County), and the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, in Hide hill; the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, at the Bridge end; and the British Linen Co. Bank, in Sandgate; the Berwick and Tweedmouth Savings Bank also has an office here. The Town Hall, in the High street, is an imposing building of commanding appearance; the spire is 150 feet in height, in which there is a clock and a peal of eight bells. The old custom of ringing the curfew is still continued here, and at eight every evening it is rung at the Town Hall. Another remnant of a bygone age is the old stocks by the side of the Town Hall steps. The Corn Exchange, in Sandgate, is a large and commodious building, erected by a limited liability company, and was opened in June, 1858. Besides being well suited for the purpose for which it was built, it is also available for meetings, entertainments, &c. It is well lighted and heated, and will accommodate 1,500 persons. The Queen's Rooms, in Hide hill, erected by Mr. J. D. Purves, in 1880, are also used for meetings, entertainments, &c. The large hall (with gallery) will hold 1,000 persons. The Institute, in High street, is a very substantial building, erected in 1881, at a cost of £2,000. It contains reading rooms, museum of national history of the district, and a school of art. The Musonic Hall, situate on the Parade, and erected in 1873, is also a handsome stone building, and considerably improves this part of the town. The other public erections are the Barracks, the Infirmary, the Union Workhouse, and a Templars' Hall. There are three good hotels—the King's Arms, in Hide hill, the Red Lion, in High street, and the Station Hotel, by the North-Eastern station, Tweedmouth, all of which are complete and comfortable establishments.

The borough, previous to the operation of the Municipal Reform Act, was governed by a charter granted by James I. The last enactment vested the government in a mayor, six aldermen, and eighteen councillors, with a recorder and the usual assistant officers, under the style of the "Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the Borough of Berwick-upon-Tweed;" the same Act divided the borough into three wards, and provided it with a commission of the peace; there is also a sheriff. Sessions are held quarterly, presided over by the Recorder, W. T. Greenbow, Esq.; the corporation, as lords of the manor, hold courts leet and baron twice in the year, and Berwick is included in the first circuit of county court towns under the acts for the recovery of debts. The limits of the borough are defined by the Boundary Act to comprise the parish of Berwick and the respective townships of Tweedmouth and Spittal. The borough was first represented in the English Parliament in the reign of Henry VIII., and from that time (1529), it continued to send two members, until the passing of the Redistribution of Seats Bill, when it was included in the Berwick-upon-Tweed division of Northumberland, which extends from Felton on the south to Berwick on the north, taking in the whole of the coast from the Coquet to the Tweed, being bounded by the limits of the county on the west. It contains the petty-sessional divisions of Bamburgh, Coquetdale North, Glendale, Northamshire and Island-hire, Coquetdale East (except the parishes of Gloster Hill, Morwick, Ackington, Ackington Park, Amble, Hauxley, Warkworth and Tongstone), and the municipal borough of Berwick-upon-Tweed. The present member is Sir Edward Grey, Bart.

The parish church, dedicated to the Holy Trinity, is a flat-roofed Gothic pile, begun in 1648, and finished in 1652; from being destitute of either tower or spire, it has a rather singular appearance, but in the days of the Commonwealth these were deemed unnecessary ornaments. The benefice is a vicarage. Since the public cemetery in the North road was opened, it is only in rare cases that interments are allowed in the churchyard. St. Mary's church, Castlegate, is a neat stone edifice, erected in 1853, at the expense of the late Captain George Gordon. The living is a vicarage. The other places of worship consist of one edifice in connection with the Church of Scotland; three of the Presbyterian church of England, the church in Wallace green being a very fine building, built at an expense of nearly £6,000; one United Presbyterian church, a Wesleyan, a Primitive Methodist, a Baptist, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The educational establishments of Berwick are the Grammar School, the Corporation Academy (for the children of freemen solely, the salaries of the rector and teacher and all other expenses being paid by the Corporation), and National, British, and Roman Catholic schools; besides these there are a few conducted privately.

The weekly market is on Saturday, and one for fat cattle every alternate Monday; this latter market was formerly held at Hide hill; but, owing to the great inconvenience caused to the general traffic, it was transferred in 1886 to a more suitable position in Catlegate. A fair is held on the last Friday in May for horses and cattle, and there are statuts or "hirings" for servants on the first Saturdays in March and May. The population of the municipal and local board district was in 1881, 13,995, and in 1891, 13,847, showing a decrease in ten years of 698.

TWEEDMOUTH is a populous parish, now forming part of the borough of Berwick. It is situated at the south end of the ridge, about a quarter of a mile from Berwick, and consists of several streets, irregularly built, but the general appearance of the place has been much improved of late years. The North-Eastern station is situated at the eastern end of the town. The inhabitants are extensively engaged in the salmon fishery; and the other branches of trade, exports and imports, are of the like nature with those of Berwick. Works for the manufacture of agricultural implements and engineering and boiler works provide employment for a fair proportion of the inhabitants; waterworks for the supply of Berwick are also situated here. The Corporation of Berwick are lords of the manor of Tweedmouth. There is a parish cemetery here. A new dock was opened on the 4th of October, 1876; it admits vessels up to 500 tons burthen, and has an area of $3\frac{1}{2}$ acres, and a depth of 21 ft.; the cost of construction was about £35,000. There is railway communication from Tweedmouth station to the dock by the North-Eastern Railway Co. The places of worship are the parish church, dedicated to St. Bartholomew (the living of which is a vicarage), an English Presbyterian church, and one connected with the Church of Scotland. Population included with Berwick.

SPITTAL, a populous village in the parish of Tweedmouth, about three-quarters of a mile from Berwick, is situated at the mouth of the river. The curing of herrings is carried on, and there are also a manufactory of spades and shovels, and several extensive manure works. The gas works for the borough are situated here. Many good houses have been built for the accommodation of visitors who resort hither for sea-bathing. There is also a valuable mineral spa, the waters of which contain iron, lime, magnesia, and sulphate of soda. The places of worship are an Established Church of England, dedicated to St. John the Evangelist; a Presbyterian Church of England, and a Mission Hall. There are also a British school and a National school. ORD is a township in the parish of Tweedmouth.

ANCROFT is a village and parish in the county of Northumberland, five and a half miles S.W. from Berwick. The village of Ancroft (or St. Ann's Croft, as it was formerly called) was at one time of much greater extent, but being visited by the plague in 1666, it was destroyed by fire, by order of the Government; the foundations of many houses are found in the adjacent fields. The church of St. Ann (from which the place derives its name), is a very ancient edifice, and was originally founded in 1092. It was in the time of the Edwards converted into a peel tower for the protection of the inhabitants against the Scotch. The living is a vicarage. There is also a place of worship for English Presbyterians. There is a National school and a Presbyterian school at Ancroft Moor. CHESWICK is a hamlet in this parish. Goswick, a small township and hamlet previously belonging to Holy Island parish, was in March, 1887, transferred for civil purposes to the parish of Ancroft. Population in 1881, 1,522, and in 1891, 1,526.

SCREMERSTON is a scattered village in the county of Northumberland, $3\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.E. from Berwick, its post town. Here are the extensive collieries, lime and brick works of the Scremerston and Shoreswood Coal Co. There is an Established church, dedicated to St. Peter, and a National school here.

NORHAM is a populous village in the parish of its name, on the south bank of the Tweed, in the county of Northumberland, situated $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles S.W. from Berwick. It consists chiefly of one long wide street, with a green in the centre, on which stands a cross. The houses are well built, and the land around is very productive and well cultivated. There is a station on the Kelso branch of the North-Eastern Railway, about three-quarters of a mile from the village, and also a station at Velvet Hall on the same branch, for the convenience of the district. It is situated about midway between Berwick and Norham. A bridge crossing the Tweed connects it with Berwickshire, and at Horncliffe the river is also spanned by a very neat suspension bridge. The ancient castle of Norham stands on an eminence a short distance from the village; the extent of the ruins shows that the fortress had formerly been of great strength and importance. The tower is still standing, though much dilapidated, and consists of four storeys, 70 feet high, with many vaults or prisons, which are yet entire. The grounds surrounding it are cultivated as a market garden. The ruins have within recent years been repaired, with a view to their preservation. The church, a fine Norman structure, dedicated to St. Cuthbert, is very ancient, the original one being built in 840, the middle aisle being the only portion of that remaining; the church had anciently the privilege of sanctuary for thirty-seven days. The living is a vicarage in the patronage of the dean and chapter of Durham. There are also places of worship for the Free Church, Presbyterian, and Primitive Methodist denominations. There is a National school in the village. FELKINGTON, GRINDON, HORNCLEIFFE, LOAN END, LONGRIDGE, NORHAM MAINS, SHORESWOOD, THORNTON, and TWEED are townships in this parish. In 1881 the parish had a population of 2,682, and in 1891, 2,412, and the village 878 of that number.

CHIRNSIDE,

CHIRNSIDE BRIDGE AND ALLANTON.

CHIRNSIDE is a parish of 5,553 acres, lying to the eastern part of the Merse, on the northern side of the Whitadder, and extending four miles in length, by about three in breadth. The village is 50 miles E. by s. from Edinburgh, 13½ N.E. from Greenlaw, 9 N.W.
 from Berwick, and 6 N.E. from Duns. It consists of two streets, the buildings of which are for the most part detached and straggling, and extend nearly a mile in length. The upper part of the village is now greatly improved by the erection of several good stone houses.
 There is an excellent supply of water brought from about a mile distant. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a United Presbyterian church, and a Free Church. From the hill on which the village is situated a fine view of many miles of fertile and well cultivated country, interspersed with many gentlemen's seats, is obtained, the view to the south being bounded by the Cheviot hills. The estate of Ninewells, the family seat of the Humes, is in this neighbourhood, and David Hume, the celebrated historian, though born in Edinburgh, was from his infancy brought up in this parish, which may therefore proudly claim him as its own; the mansion is at present occupied by the Right Hon. Ed. Majoribanks, M.P. Some vestiges of the ancient encampments are discernible in this district. The railway station is 1 mile distant. Population of Chirnside parish in 1881, 1,516, and in 1891, 1,456, and of the village, 915.

Less than a mile west of the village, is the pretty rural hamlet of CHIRNSIDE BRIDGE, where a good bridge crosses the Whitadder, and over which also the railway is carried by means of another bridge, a handsome structure of stone. Upon the banks of the river a species of gypsum is found, and in other parts of the district abundance of marl is obtained. Chirnside railway station is situated here.

At ALLANTON, a delightful little rural village, in the parish of Edrom, one mile and a half s. from Chirnside, and 7 N.E. from Duns.
 Two rivers—the Blackadder and the Whitadder—unite, and a neat stone bridge crosses the mingled streams. Blackadder House, the seat of Sir George Lauderdale Houstoun Boswall, is in the centre of the village. The nearest railway station is Chirnside, 2 miles distant.

COCKBURNSPATH

IS a parish of 12,652 acres, on the sea coast, the village being 35½ miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N. from Greenlaw, 14 N. from Duns, 8 S.E. from Dunbar, and 21 N.W. from Berwick, situate on the road between the two last-named towns, and on the line of the North British railway. The shore is precipitous, presenting a line of cliffs about one hundred feet above the level of the sea; behind the cliffs the ground rises gently towards the hills, having many deep glens, or ravines, whose sides are sometimes sloping and covered with verdure; but the general appearance is rocky, with overhanging woods. Over one of these ravines, cut by the course of the Pease burn, is thrown "The Peaths," or Pease bridge, planned and erected by Mr. Henderson in 1786. It is one hundred and twenty-three feet from the bottom of the Pease burn, which flows beneath, three hundred feet in length, and fifteen in width; it is looked upon as a masterpiece of architecture. In former days it was understood to be one of the highest bridges in the world, and is consequently an object of peculiar attraction to the curious visiting these parts. Nearly a quarter of a mile west of the bridge are the remains of an ancient castle, distinguished by no other appellation than that of the "old tower." As this parish is near the boundary of the two kingdoms, many traces of camps are visible on the rising grounds, and indelible proofs of military operations of former days arrest the eye in the passes. The ruins of the church of Auld Cambus, formerly united with this parish, are still standing. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church at SROCKBRIDGE, about a mile south of the village, are the present places of worship. There is also a very handsome school house. A public hall, capable of seating two hundred persons, was erected by subscription in 1893-4. This place would no doubt become a favourite resort of summer visitors were more accommodation provided. The small fishing village of FISHER'S COVE, about a mile to the north of Cockburnspath, consisting of some fifteen or twenty houses, is picturesquely situated on the shore, and on the way down to the small boat harbour is a curious tunnelled passage, with branching caves extending a considerable way into the rock. This village suffered terrible disaster in the storm of October, 1881, when of the twenty-one fishermen that put to sea in the morning eleven perished, since which time the staple industry has been somewhat crippled. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,180; and in 1891, 1,112.

COLDINGHAM

IS a parish of 24,021 acres, ten miles in length and five in breadth, lying on the coast of Berwickshire, having on its north and east sides the German Ocean. The village, a burgh of barony, is 45 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 21 N.N.E. of Greenlaw, 17 S.E. of Dunbar, 13 N.N.E. of Duns, 11 N.N.W. of Berwick, and 4 N.W. from Ayton. It is charmingly seated upon a small eminence in the centre of a fine valley, a short distance from the sea, near to St. Abb's Head, a noted point of land projecting into the sea. A lighthouse was in 1862 erected on this point, and latterly a fog signal. Its antiquity is unquestionably great, for it is distinctly pointed out in Ptolemy's map of Britain under the Roman sway, and in this respect surpasses Berwick and other more considerable towns, whose existence is not authenticated for some ages posterior. About a mile west from St. Abb's is Coldingham Loch; it is of a triangular figure, upwards of a mile in circumference, and 250 feet above the level of the sea, covering about thirty acres. On the top of Earnshough, 440 yards north of the loch, are the ruins of two oblong British camps, called the Tunlaw, i.e., Townlaw, in order to distinguish them from other camps beyond Moorburn, called Outlaw, i.e., Outerlaw. On the south side of the town are the ruins of the once magnificent and well-endowed priory of Coldingham, rebuilt by King Edgar, who personally assisted at its consecration. All that now remains of it is the east gable and north side (which form part of the modern parish kirk), with a few straggling fragments, including a small Saxon arch, part of the palace said to have been erected here by the royal founder of the priory. At one time this religious house stood at the head of such establishments in Scotland, and was famed far and wide for its wealth and importance. When the church of the priory was destroyed, its fine-toned bell, according to tradition, was carried off to Durham. So early as the seventh century a nunnery was settled here, but of what order is unknown, of which St. Ebba, the daughter and sister of kings, became abbess in 670. The history of no religious house would throw so much light on the bloody scenes and misgovernment of Scotland from the fourteenth to the seventeenth century as this priory, with its history carefully written. The church was considerably altered and restored in 1857, and will seat over 500 worshippers. Fast Castle, in this neighbourhood, is supposed to be the place described as Wolf's Craig, in the novel of the "Bride of Lammermoor." The village consists of two or three humble streets, with a cross in the centre. The volunteers having been disbanded, the hall formerly used by them is now let for meetings, entertainments, &c. The village has been much resorted to within late years by sea-bathers; the scarcity of suitable accommodation and the distance from the railway being, however, a drawback. St. ABBS is a village in this parish. The nearest railway station to Coldingham is at Reston, about three miles distant. The population of the parish of Coldingham was in 1881, 3,169, and in 1891, 2,910.

COLDSTREAM,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF ECCLES, BIRGHAM, LEITHOLM, CORNHILL, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

COLDSTREAM is a town and burgh of barony, in the parish of that name. The parish was anciently called LENNEL, but it is a matter of uncertainty when the name was changed, as it appears from many old charters that it was so called in the 11th and 12th centuries. The town is 47 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 14 S.S.W. from Berwick, 10 S.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S. from Duns, and 9 N.E. from Kelso, situated on the north bank of the Tweed, and formerly derived importance from a ford on that river. By this passage Edward I. entered Scotland with his forces in 1236; and many other English and Scottish armies, before the union of the crowns, made their way by this facility to ravage the country of their respective enemies. It was last used by a Scottish army as an entrance into England in 1640, when the covenanters found it necessary to have recourse to that extreme measure against Charles I. The Tweed is crossed at this place by a strong bridge of freestone, erected in 1766, at a cost of about £7,000, John Smatton being the engineer. It consists of seven arches, including two for abutments, and is 905 feet long and 25 feet wide. In 1830 it underwent a thorough repair at a cost of about £2,000. It is placed at a distance of a furlong from the east end of the town, and from this spot a very delightful view up and down the woody banks of the river presents itself. This neighbourhood is the scene of Sir Walter Scott's poem "Marmion." The town is irregularly built, quite Scottish in its appearance, notwithstanding its proximity to England, while its border situation at one time rendered it eligible to participate with Gretna Green in the clandestine matrimonial trade. During the winter season Coldstream is much resorted to by the nobility and gentry for foxhunting; the Duke of Buccleuch's and the Berwickshire and East Lothian packs meet regularly in the neighbourhood.

The town is governed by commissioners of police for the burgh. Justice of peace courts are held as occasion requires, and sheriff small debt courts four times a year. The trade here is not extensive, no manufactures being carried on in this locality. Two proprietary banking establishments have branches here, and there is a good inn. A Mechanics' Institution, erected in High street, in 1863, at a cost of £1,200, contains a large lecture room, library, reading rooms, &c.; the funds for the erection were raised partly by subscriptions and donations. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, two United Presbyterian churches, and a meeting house for the Catholic Apostolic community. At the East end of the town, erected by the friends of the late Charles Majoribanks, Esq. M.P. for Berwickshire, is a handsome memorial to record the successful result of the contested election for the county in 1832. In 1852 Sir John Majoribanks, Bart., of Lees, had powerful hydraulic machinery erected within his grounds, by means of which water is forced up from the Tweed into a large tank, on the top of the stable tower, from whence the town is supplied. In connection with the waterworks is a neat fountain, situated in the centre of the Market place, erected by the same gentleman. In recognition of this public boon, a handsome obelisk was erected near the church by the inhabitants in honour of the donor, with an inscription commemorative of the event. General Monk resided at Coldstream at the critical period when he awaited a favourable opportunity to advance into England, make a decisive impression by the presence of his army, and at once effect the Restoration. During the winter of 1659-60 he raised here a regiment, which was then, and has ever since been, denominated "The Coldstream Guards." Previous to the Reformation this place could boast of a rich priory of Cistercian nuns, but of the building not even a fragment or vestige is now to be discovered. The weekly market formerly held on Thursday is now discontinued. The parish contains 8,320 acres, and in 1891 had a population of 2,561, and in 1891, 2,388.

The village of ECCLES is nearly six miles N.W. from Coldstream, in a highly cultivated parish of that name; the latter extending nearly eight miles in length by six in breadth, lying to the west of Coldstream, and bordering the river Tweed; it contains about 12,410 acres. The surface of the country is in general level, the soil rich and the grounds are well enclosed. There was once a nunnery of great magnitude and repute in the parish; this religious edifice, however, has shared the fate of the one that existed at Coldstream. "Deadriggs," on Crosshall Farm, in this district, was formerly the scene of a desperate battle, and a stone which rises nine feet above the surface of the ground is said to mark the grave of one of the Percys, who fell in the contest. At BIRGHAM and LEITHOLM, two small villages, the principal retail business of the parish is carried on. The parish in 1831 contained a population of 1,546, and 1891, 1,361.

CORNHILL is a neat small village in the parish of its name. Formerly it was a part of North Durham, from which it was separated by Act of Parliament in 1844, and united with the county of Northumberland; it is situated one and a half miles from Coldstream. Coldstream station, on the Kelso branch of the North Eastern railway, is situated here, and in September, 1887, a new branch to Alnwick was opened for traffic. The soil of the parish is rich and fertile, and in a high state of cultivation. The church dedicated to St. Helen, formerly a chapel of ease to Norham, is a neat structure in the early English style. It was first erected, probably in 1082, but was rendered a distinct benefice in 1730. The living is a perpetual curacy in the gift of the Dean and Chapter of Durham. From the rectory a beautiful view of the Tweed presents itself, and in the distance may be seen the celebrated Flookin Field. There is a commodious inn in the village called the Collingwood Arms, where every accommodation can be had. Fairs are held on the first Monday in March (for hiring), and auction sales for cattle, sheep, &c. are also held every alternate Monday. Population in 1891, 688.

CRANSHAWS,

ABBEY ST. BATHANS, BUNKLE WITH PRESTON, ELLEMFORD, AND LONGFORMACUS.

CRANSHAWS is a small thinly populated parish, of about 8,708 acres, lying amongst the Lammermoor hills, and intersected by the parish of Longformacus; it is about 30 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 S.E. from Haddington, and about 12 N.W. from Duns. The old castle of Cranshaws is an ancient edifice of great strength, and still entire. The remains of many encampments show what both traditionary and historical records testify, that this part of the country has been the scene of much bloodshed and strife. The nearest railway station is Duns, 10 miles distant. Population of parish in 1881, 106, and in 1891, 85.

The parish of ABBEY SAINT BATHANS is 7 miles N.W. from Duns, also situated in the midst of the Lammermoor hills. The soil is light and dry, and on the banks of the Whitadder fertile and well-cultivated; but the hilly district is barren and covered with heath. The remains of an ancient abbey of Bernardines, founded in 1170, and dedicated to St. Bathan by one of the Countesses of March, form the only object of interest or curiosity in the parish. Edwin's or Ford's, about a mile below St. Bathans, on the Whitadder, consists of three concentric circles of stone, seven and ten feet distant from each other. The diameter of the innermost circle is about 20 feet. The nearest railway station is Grant's House, 5 miles distant. The parish has an area of 4,797 acres, in 1881 had a population of 250, and in 1891, 246.

BUNKLE AND PRESTON, a united parish forming a square of nearly six miles, and containing 9,189 acres, is situated about 4 miles N.E. from Duns. The soil on the high lands towards the Lammermoor hills was at one time thin, dry and poor; but by the application of lime and marl it has been much improved. The rest of the parish, particularly on the banks of the Whitadder, is a fertile loam, and well cultivated. During the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries the lands in the parish of Bonkyl (then so called) were in the possession of a family of the same name; in the wars of the Bruce, Sir Alexander de Bonkyl is frequently noticed. One of his female descendants, marrying Sir John Steward, had a son, who was created Earl of Angus in 1329; this title in 1377 merged into the family of Douglas, and they, in addition to the title of Earls of Angus, are sometimes called Lords of Bonkyl. The nearest railway stations are Duns and Preston, each five miles distant. Population in 1881, 726, and in 1891, 672.

LONGFORMACUS parish, likewise in the Lammermoor district, is hilly, and for the most part pastoral, but the low grounds are well cultivated; it is about 12 miles in length, and six in breadth, and contains 19,592 acres. The village, which is about 7 miles S. from Duns, has been much improved by the erection of several neat cottages, a school, and a residence for the master. An Established church and one for a Free Congregation are the places of worship. Two strikingly fine conical hills, called the "Derrington Laws," rise in this parish, and form conspicuous objects in the distance. ELLEMFORD, 3 miles from Longformacus, is in the same parish, and is much frequented in the summer season by anglers and sportsmen. The nearest railway station is Duns, 7 miles distant. Population in 1881, 385, and in 1891, 324.

POST RECEIVING HOUSE at Ann Ewart's, CRANSHAWS.—Delivery (to callers), 3 p.m.; despatch, 11 40 a.m.—The nearest Money Order and Telegraph Office is at DUNS, 10 miles distant.

DUNS, OR DUNSE,

WITH THE PARISHES AND VILLAGES OF CUMLEDGE, EDROM, GAVINTON IN LANGTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUNS, OR DUNSE, is a burgh or barony, and the largest town in the shire (Berwick not being taken as strictly belonging to the county); it is 45 miles E. by S. from Edinburgh, 15 W. from Berwick, 11 S.W. from Ayrton, and S.N.E. from Greenlaw. It has a station on the North British line from Reston to St. Boswells, situated about half a mile on the east side of the town. It lies nearly in the centre of the county, on a fine plain, under the southern skirts of Duns Law, upon which hill the old town of Duns stood previous to its being burnt down. Its present position is at the head of a plain twenty-five miles long, encompassed on three sides by the Lammermoor ridge, the river Whitadder running by it. This river, which produces the finest trout, affords ample sport to the angler. Duns Law, which rises to the height of about five hundred feet at the back of the town, is remarkable in the religious history of Scotland. On the 6th of June, 1639, when Charles I. with his army lay encamped at a place called the Birks, on the opposite side of the Tweed, with the intention of reducing the Covenanters, a Scottish covenanted army of seventy thousand men, under General Leslie, took up their position here, to defend the country from invasion. The army had a battery of forty cannon, on the brow of the hill, pointing in the direction of the king's camp. After lying in this position for three weeks, Charles I. was induced by their threatening attitude to enter into a treaty, in virtue of which the two armies were dissolved. The scenery from Duns Law may be classed as beautiful, and would repay a short sojourn in the town by the tourist or visitor.

Duns is a place of great antiquity; but from its situation near the border, it was frequently destroyed by the English before the accession of James to the throne of England. On one of these occasions the town records were burnt, so that no account of its origin or early history has been transmitted to later ages. The present town is generally well built, the streets, lighted with gas, containing a few well-furnished shops. It is abundantly supplied with water, and there are two hotels, viz., the White Swan and the Black Bull. There are several good villas in the suburbs, which give the town an improving appearance, and in the town are three branch banking houses. The other principal businesses may be comprised in a brewery, corn mills, a rope walk, and the grain trade. Duns is a commercial point of view may be considered to be declining, from the fact that the population is decreasing; the weekly market, held on Tuesday, and formerly well attended, is now nearly extinct, and the grain trade has also fallen off to a large extent. The fairs for sheep, cattle, &c., all of which were well known, may now be said to be nearly if not quite obsolete. A sale by auction is held every alternate Monday for cattle, by Messrs. R. G. & W. B. Swan, and is well attended. A fair for hiring servants is held the first Tuesday in March, and single hirings are held on the first Tuesday in May and November. The town is governed by a chief magistrate and commissioners under the General Police and Improvement Act, 1862; the feuars manage, by a council of nine, the property vested in them. A justice of peace court is held on the first Monday of every month, and a sheriff court eight times in the year, viz., the last Friday in January, February, March, May, June and November, the second Friday in July, and the first Friday in October, at both of which debt claims of limited amount are adjudicated. A civil court is also held every Friday, except during the vacations, which are arranged by the sheriff. The Town Hall, a fine Gothic building, standing in the centre of the market place, was originally founded by the Earl of Moray, but the present edifice was erected in 1816, by the feuars, assisted by subscriptions. There is a Corn Exchange and a fine structure called the County building, in New West street, where the courts are held, and which also contains the police station. The learned and celebrated metaphysician and theologian, James Duns Scotus, was born here in 1744, and died at Cologne in 1803. The Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the "Fourfold State" and other works, Abraham Robertson, LL.D., professor of astronomy at Oxford, and Thomas McCrie, D.D., in Edinburgh, were likewise born here. Duns

Castle, a fine modern mansion, in the castellated style, stands about half a mile north-west of the town. The ancient edifice was the stronghold of Randolph, Earl of Moray, the nephew and co-patriot of Bruce; it is now the seat of William James Hay, Esq., and the interior decorations of the house and the paintings with which it is embellished render it one of the finest residences in this district of Scotland. Duns Castle was originally built in the year 1320, by the celebrated Earl of Moray; it was restored and considerable additions made to it in 1820, by its then proprietor, Colonel Hay. Among the paintings it contains are many saved from the Seton gallery. In particular the well-known family group representing the sixth Lord Seton, the attached friend of Queen Mary, surrounded by his family, as also several portraits of an ancestor of Mr. Hay. The places of worship are an Established church, a Free church, three belonging to the United Presbyterians, an Episcopalian church, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The parish church was burnt down in February, 1879, but was rebuilt on a larger scale by the heritors of the parish, at a cost of upwards of £4,000; many improvements were also effected in the internal arrangements, and in December, 1880, it was re-opened for public worship. The parish of Duns which contains about 11,396 acres, had in 1881, a population of 8,353, and in 1891, 2,388; the town comprising 1,535 of that number.

At CUMLEDGE, about 2 miles N. from Duns, a hamlet in that parish there is a large steam and water mill for the manufacture of blankets and plaidings.

EDROM is a parish and village, the latter about 3½ miles E. from Duns, situated near the road leading from that town to Chirnside, and on the banks of the Whitadder. About half a mile from the village is a station on the Berwick and St. Boswells branch of the North British line. The parish of Edrom, which is ten miles in length, by six in breadth, and contains about 9,545 acres, is watered by the Blackadder and Whitadder streams. Much of the soil is fertile, and produces excellent corn. There is an Established church and a Board school here. The parish of Edrom (which also contains the village of ALLANTON, given with Chirnside), contained in 1881 a population of 1,514, and in 1891, 1,361.

LANGTON is a parish comprising the village of GAVINTON, the latter situated 2 miles S.W. from Duns, and half a mile S. of the site of the old village of Langton, which has entirely disappeared. The present village, which is neat and regular in its form, obtained its name from Mr. Gavin, the late proprietor of the estate of Langton; it now includes the whole parish, and belongs to Mrs. Hamilton. Formerly the proprietor of Langton occupied a castle in Langton Wood; but for the last century the family have resided at the mansion here—Langton House—which has been rebuilt on a palatial scale, and is in the baronial style of architecture. Upon the top of the hill called Rascleughhead are the vestiges of an ancient British camp. The parish church of Langton, situate at Gavinton, was restored in 1873, at a cost of about £2,000. It is beautifully situated on an eminence, and the tower and spire can be seen from a long distance. There is also a Free church and a Board school in the village, the latter erected in 1874. The nearest railway station is at Duns, 2½ miles distant. The acreage of the parish of Langton is about 7,139, and the population in 1881 was 505, and in 1891, 417.

LEGERWOOD, REDPATH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EARLSTON (anciently Ercildoun) is a parish and village, the latter 31 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 11 W. by N. from Kelso, 18 S.W. from Duns, 15 N. from Jedburgh, 10 S.W. from Greenlaw, 8½ N.E. from Galashiels, and 7 S. from Lauder. The situation of this village is at once rare and beautiful, being seated in a rich valley encompassed by hills of a moderate height, which are interspersed by thriving plantations, and in a state of high cultivation; the Leader river flows on the west of the parish, and the Eden on the east. At one time the trade of the village and its neighbourhood was confined to weaving certain fabrics for the Glasgow houses, but now the manufacturing of woollens and ginghams is carried on, the latter having never been equalled for excellence of quality. At the west end of the village, situated on the bank of the Leader, may be seen the ruins of an old tower, which was the residence of Sir Thomas Learmouth, commonly called "the Rhymer," who flourished in the thirteenth century. A stone in the wall of the church bears the following inscription in ancient characters, "Auld Rhymer's race lies in this place." Cowdenknowes, the residence of Colonel Charles Hope, J.P., is an ancient building, standing on the side of a hill, the locality of which is famous in Scottish song. There are two fairs—on the 29th of June and the third Thursday in October, for cattle and horses, and a cattle and sheep market, and also a corn market, every alternate Monday. REDPATH is a village in this parish. The parish of Earliston has an area of 9,968 acres. Population in 1881, 1,767, and in 1891, 1,784, the village having 1,060 of this number.

LEGERWOOD parish extends three miles in length by two and a half broad, and contains about 8,789 acres. Its elevated surface is well cultivated, being occupied by opulent and practically skilful farmers, and is adapted, in general, for both crops and pasture. The village of Legerwood is 5 miles N. from Earliston, situated on a cross road off the thoroughfare through Lauderdale. BOONHILL, in this parish, was a signal station during the time of war. The nearest railway station is Earliston, 4½ miles distant. Population of parish in 1881, 549, and in 1891, 476.

EYEMOUTH,

AYTON, BURNMOUTH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

EYEMOUTH is an ancient little seaport and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, 50 miles E. from Edinburgh, 21 N.E. from Greenlaw, the like distance S.E. from Dunbar, 20 miles N. from Coldstream, 13½ N.E. from Duns, 3 N.W. from Berwick, and 8 N.E. from Ayton station on the North British railway. It lies at the mouth of the Eye, where that river discharges its waters into the North Sea, from which circumstance the town and parish takes its name. The port is a very ancient one, being known as such as early as the reign of Alexander II., when it was resorted to by the monks of that age as a commodious harbour for importing supplies for their establishment, and for shipping wool, hides, &c., in which they trafficked. Shipping can work into and out of the bay at all times of the tide, or lie at anchor in the haven secure from all winds, except the north and north-east, or when the passage cannot be effected up the Frith of Forth; and the port is occasionally frequented by wind-bound vessels. The herring fishery is a source of profitable employment to the greater part of the inhabitants, there being 96 boats regularly employed during the season. This number is, however, frequently largely supplemented by boats from other parts, the total number engaged in this industry being as high as 132. In October, 1881, 43 large boats were employed at the white winter fishing; but in the terrible storm on the 14th of that month, when 123 lives were lost from this port alone, the number of boats was reduced to 28. The annual produce of the fishing now amounts to about £40,000. The trustees of the harbour obtained the sum of £25,000 from the Public Works Loan Commissioners to accelerate the long desired improvements of the harbour, the works in connection with which were completed in 1887, but unfortunately have disappointed the expectations formed of them, and are not as useful and convenient as was hoped. A further sum of £10,000 has been advanced by the Fishery Board of Scotland for the improvement of the entrance to the harbour. A new railway has recently been opened, styled the Eyemouth Railway, connecting Eyemouth with Burnmouth. Eyemouth was a great depot for smugglers; it is affirmed that at one time almost every house had secret cellars connected with it, wherein those engaged in the illicit trade concealed the goods and liquors landed here from the luggers which frequented the harbour and neighbouring shores. The vigilance and energy of the preventive service, together with a judicious alteration of the duties, have, however, long since destroyed this illegitimate mode of acquiring wealth, and turned the trade of the town into more honourable and less hazardous channels. On a small promontory, which stretches out into the sea, there are the remains of a regular fortification, supposed to have been constructed by a French officer entrusted with the command of the Queen Regent's troops. A church of the Establishment, a Free church, an Episcopalian church, an Evangelical Union Church, and chapels for Primitive Methodists and United Presbyterians are the places of worship. A handsome school was erected in 1876. The St. Abb's

Lodge of Master Masons and the Land o' Cakes Royal Arch Chapter hold their meetings here, in a neat lodge room formed in 1757; it was in this room that Burns, the poet, was made a Royal Arch Mason. Fairs are held on the first Thursdays of June and October. The parish of Eyemouth, which embraces an area of 1,004 statute acres, contained in 1831 a population of 2,935, and in 1891 2,667; the burgh having 2,537, and landward, 130.

AYTON is a parish and village, the latter 2½ miles S.W. from Eyemouth, and 8 N.W. from Berwick, occupying a delightful situation on the left bank of the Eye, on the main line of railway between Edinburgh and the south. The parish contains about 6,699 acres, and describes an area of about 4 miles each way, including about 2 miles of sea coast, which is here bold and rocky; more inland the soil is rich, producing all kinds of grain. Several vestiges of encampments are discernible through the parish, and urns, with pieces of broken armour, have been occasionally brought to the surface by the plough. A church, the foundation stone of which was laid September 8th, 1894, was erected near to the old one, which for many years had been falling into decay. It is in the English Gothic style of the 14th century, with a lofty tower, and contains sittings for nearly 800 persons. The cost was about £7,000, to which sum the late Mr. Innes was a liberal contributor. There are two United Presbyterian churches in the village, one of which, a handsome building, was erected in 1871, on the site of a former one built in 1778. A justice of the peace court is held here monthly, and a sheriff's court for the recovery of small debts is held four times a year. Population of the parish in 1831, 2,099, and in 1891, 1,826; of the village, 650.

BURNMOUTH is a small fishing village, in the parish of Ayton, having a harbour situated at the foot of an almost perpendicular ledge of rock; the cottages, standing near to high water mark give it a very romantic appearance. The heights in the vicinity afford very beautiful and varied scenery, extending to the Eldons on the south, Lammern Moor on the west, and Bamborough on the east—the north being the ocean. It is about 2½ miles from Ayton and 6 from Berwick. It is a coast-guard station, and there is a railway station close to the entrance to the village, on the North British line. There is a spacious Board school in the village, but there is no place of worship. A number of boats are employed and stationed here for herring fishing, and there are others of a larger class for white fishing in the winter season.

FOULDEN AND MORDINGTON.

FOULDEN is a parish and village, the latter one of the prettiest little places in the county, and was formerly a burgh of barony; 52 miles e. by s. of Edinburgh, 10 e. of Duns, and 5 n.w. of Berwick, pleasantly situated on the north side of the Whiteadder river, which is here confined between steep banks. With in the last 25 years the dwellings have been nearly all rebuilt in a neat and picturesque style. The parish, which lies in the eastern part of the Merse district, is two and a half miles in length by two in breadth, bounded by Ayton on the north and Hutton on the south, and contains about 3,278 acres. Foulden church is celebrated as having been the meeting place of the Commis-ions sent by Queen Elizabeth to vindicate her execution of Mary Queen of Scots. In 1881 the parish had a population of 893, and in 1891, 851.

The parish of MORDINGTON lies in the south-eastern corner of the county, and the kirk is about one mile from Foulden. It was in the manor house of Mordington that Cromwell, when he passed the Tweed for the first time, established his quarters. It has been erroneously asserted that the Princess Margaret was married to James IV. in Lamberton church (now in ruins) in this parish. At the boundary of the parish, with the liberties of Berwick, is the hamlet of LAMBERTON, and at this place (within the Scottish border) marriages were solemnized in the same summary manner, and on precisely the same principles, as they were at better known Gretna. The remains of a Danish camp, Edinzoan Castle, situate at top of a steep rock, and the "Witches' Know" 649 feet high, where last century several unfortunate women were burned for witchcraft, are objects not unworthy the notice of the traveller journeying through this part of the county. Ironstone some years ago was discovered within the parish, and subsequently coal has been got on the estate of Major Charles Frederick Campbell Renton, of Mordington House. The parish contains about 2,389 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 367, and in 1891, 324.

GREENLAW, GORDON, AND HUME.

GREENLAW is a burgh of barony, and considerable (although Duns is considerably larger) the county town of Berwickshire; it is 37 miles s.e. from Edinburgh, 20 w. from Berwick, 12 e. from Ladder, 7½ s.w. from Duns, and 10 n.w. from Coldstream. It is situated in a valley, on the north bank of the Blackadder, which stream is crossed by two bridges, and consists of one long street, with a large square or green, where the fairs were held, in the centre of which are the county buildings. After Berwick was taken by the English, the sheriff and county courts were transferred first to old Greenlaw (which was one mile to the south, but of which no vestiges remain), and subsequently to the present town, where they have been held ever since, except for a short time during the turbulent reign of Charles I., when the sittings were held at Duns. Being seated near the centre of the shire, Greenlaw was by royal charter in 1596, and by Act of Parliament in 1696, ordained the head burgh of the county. A sheriff court and one for the recovery of small debts are held monthly; the justices' court sits at Duns. The old gaol and courthouse, which stood in the churchyard, have been superseded by the present strong and handsome prison and elegant county buildings, erected in 1831, at the sole expense of, and presented to the shire by, the late Sir W. H. Campbell. The parish of Greenlaw lies in the centre of the Merse, extending seven or eight miles in length, from north to south, and on an average about two miles in breadth, containing about 12,149 acres. The surface of the land is for the most part level, rising occasionally into slight detached eminences. Sheep walks, moor, and soil adapted to turnips are the main characteristics of the land. Besides the Established church, there are places of worship for Free Church and United Presbyterian congregations. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 1,245, and in 1891, 1,108, and for the village 668.

Gordon village is 5 miles s.w. from Greenlaw, on the road from Edinburgh to Kelso. The river Eden intersects the parish, which extends seven miles in length by from two to four in breadth, and contains 9,718 acres. At Gordon reside, as it is believed, the ancestors of the present Duke of Gordon, and Huntly and Huntlywood, the names of two farms in the parish, each claim the honour of giving the title of Marquis of Huntly to his Grace's eldest son. Greenknowe Tower, a venerable structure (now the property of the representatives of the late James Dalrymple, Esq.) was frequently had recourse to as a place of refuge by the inhabitants, who fled thither when suddenly surprised by incursions of the English, prior to the union between the two kingdoms. An Established church and a Free church are the places of worship. There is also a small library containing about 300 volumes, supported by subscription. The parish of Gordon had in 1881 a population of 832, and in 1891, 843.

HUME is a small village, situate 3 miles s. from Greenlaw; it is a joint ecclesiastical parish with STICHEL (Roxburghshire). The remains of Hume Castle, noted during the contentions on the borders, stand on a bold eminence which commands extensive and picturesque views over the greater portion of the Merse and Roxburghshire. The soil is very rich and fertile and in a high state of cultivation. A Board school and a burial ground are in the village, but there is no place of worship. The nearest railway station is Greenlaw, 3 miles distant. Area of the parish 6,698 acres. Population in 1891, 366.

HUTTON AND PAXTON

ARE two small, pleasant and rural villages in the parish of Hutton and district of Merse, lying to the west of Berwick bounds, from which the parish is divided by the river Whitadder. Hutton is situate about 7 miles w. from Berwick, its post town, in the northern part of the parish, and Paxton 5 miles w. from Berwick, its post town, in the eastern quarter. The parish contains 5,516 acres. The Tweed, which bounds Hutton parish on the south, is crossed by an elegant suspension bridge, called the Union bridge, from a point near Paxton, to a place a little below HORNCLEIFFE, a village in the county of Northumberland. It forms the only connection of the two sides of the river between Coldstream and Berwick, from which last named town it is frequently visited by parties of pleasure. It admits two carriages abreast, and has been of great service in facilitating the introduction of coal and lime into Berwickshire. The parish church is situated at Hutton. The Rev. P. Redpath, the erudite translator of Boethius, and author of the "Border History," was at one time minister of this parish. A school and school house were erected at Paxton in 1873 by Jean Milne Home and David Milne Home, and is an ornament to the village. There is also a reading room and library of about 900 volumes, in the village of Paxton. The parish of Hutton in 1881 contained a population of 962, and in 1891, 815.

LAUDER,

WITH THE VILLAGES OF BLAINSLIE, CHANNELKIRK, OXTON, AND THIRLSTANE.

LAUDER is an ancient royal burgh, and the capital of its parish, as it is of the district of Lauderdale; 25 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 85 w. of Berwick, 21 x. of Jedburgh, 23 s.w. of Coldstream, 20 s.w. of Duns, 17 s.w. of Kelso, 12 w. of Greenlaw, 7 n.w. of Earliston, and about 6 miles from the Stow station on the North British railway. It is situated in the vale of the Leader, on the main road from Edinburgh to Kelso, and consists principally of a line of houses on each side of the thoroughfare, at the west end of which is the town house. The buildings are plain and of irregular construction, and the town was destitute of any edifice that could lay claim to particular notice until of late years. Now there are good school premises, neat and substantial houses, two excellent inns (the Black Bull & Eagle) in the centre of the town, where every accommodation will be found; a bank and a few tasteful villas in the neighbourhood. The trade is chiefly of a local and domestic nature, and manufactures have not as yet imparted their benefits to this part of the district. The bank and the inns and some well stored shops represent the main business of the place. A Freemasons' Lodge is held in the Town Hall. The charter constituting Lauder a royal burgh was renewed in 1502, and the government vested in two bailies and seven councillors, chosen annually from amongst the freemen of the burgh. A justice of peace court is held as occasion requires, and sheriff small debt courts on the last Wednesday of February, first Wednesday of July, and first Monday of October. By the Reform Act, Lauder was joined with Haddington, Dunbar, North Berwick and Jedburgh in returning one member to Parliament, but, under the provisions of the Redistribution of Seats Act, is now included in the county.

The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, and Free and United Presbyterian churches. The first-named church, which stands to the south of the town house, was erected in 1673, when the Duke of Lauderdale removed the more ancient church from the vicinity of his residence; the edifice, though cruciform is not remarkable for elegance. The most conspicuous object in and about Lauder is Thirlstane Castle, a massive and spacious mansion, surrounded by a park and some fine woods, and is the seat of the family of Lauderdale. The castle stands between the Leader and the town, on a fine lawn, and is fitted up in the best taste of the time of Charles II., and decorated with massive balustrades and cornices, and a profusion of elaborately carved marble chimney-pieces; among the paintings, chiefly portraits, are some rare and valuable productions. The fairs formerly held here have been discontinued. The parish of Lauder contains about 34,898 acres, and in 1881 had a population of 1,940, and in 1891, 1,539, the parliamentary burgh at the same period having 763.

BLAINSLIE is a small rural village in the parish of Melrose (Roxburghshire), situated at the extreme end of the parish, and about 7 miles from the town of Melrose. It lies on the old road from Earliston to Lauder, 4 miles N.N.W. from the former place, and 2½ S.E. from the latter, from whence its letters are delivered. Earliston is the nearest railway station, 4 miles distant.

The parish of CHANNELKIRK, containing about 14,191 acres, is situated among the Lammermoor hills, where they divide the counties of Edinburgh and Haddington from Berwick. On the banks of the rivulets, which united form the river Leader, or Lauder, are about 3,000 acres in tillage; but the hills are mostly covered with heath, and are very bleak and unproductive. Population in 1881, 607, and in 1891, 545.

The village of OXTON, now called OXTON, is about 4 miles N.N.W. from Lauder, on the south of the Edinburgh road, in the upper part of the vale of the Leader. Oxtou is now the only village in the parish of Channelkirk, and in it the little business or trade that has existence throughout its entire extent is almost exclusively centred. About a mile to the west of Oxtou are the remains of the village of Channelkirk, from which the parish takes its name, the minister's manse and church being all that remain of the village, which at one time was a resting-place for travellers by the old Edinburgh road, through the Lammermoors, to Lauderdale. Fountainhall is the nearest railway station, 5½ miles distant.

POLWARTH AND FOGO.

POLWARTH is a parish of about 3,000 acres, in the district of Merse. The village, now almost decayed, is 40 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 4 S.W. from Duns, and about 3½ N.E. from Greenlaw, situated on the road between the two last-named towns. It was formerly of much greater extent, and, from its connection with Scottish song, continues to the present day the most interesting locality in the district. On the green of Polwarth, in the centre of the village, it was an ancient custom for every newly-married pair, with their company, to dance round an old thorn, the legend connected with which, according to Chambers, might furnish materials for a good romance. The estate of Polwarth formerly belonged to Sinclair of Hermandston, whose family, so far back as the fifteenth century, terminated in co-heiresses. It appears that the Misses Sinclair, of all their suitors—and they had many—preferred the sons of their powerful neighbour, Home, of Wedderburn, and it so happened that the youngest sister was beloved by the eldest Home (George), whilst the eldest placed her affections on the youngest, whose name was Patrick. After the death of the father of the young ladies they fell into the hands of an uncle, who, anxious to prevent their marriage, that he himself might become their heir, immured them in his castle, somewhere in Lothian. In this dilemma the fair prisoners contrived to get a letter transmitted to their lovers by means of an old female beggar, and they were soon gratified with the sight of the two youths accompanied by a determined band of Merse men before the gate of their prison. The uncle made both remonstrance and resistance, but in vain; his nieces were forcibly taken from him and carried off in triumph. Part of the nuptial rejoicing—for the marriage ceremony immediately ensued—consisted in a merry dance round the thorn, which even at that early period, grew in the centre of the village. The lands of Polwarth were then divided between the two Homes, and while George carried on the line in the Wedderburn family, Patrick was the founder of the branch afterwards ennobled by the title of Marchmont. In commemoration of this remarkable affair, for many years all future marriage parties danced round the thorn, and a tune seems to have been composed of the name "Polwarth on the Green," to which songs have been successfully adapted. On the front of the parish church, an ancient building, which stands about a mile south-east of the village, is a Latin inscription, importing that it was erected anterior to the year 900. In the vault of this church Sir Patrick Home, of Polwarth, afterwards the first Earl of Marchmont, and Lord Chancellor of Scotland, found an asylum from the fury of his persecutors, when a pice was set upon his head, till arrangements were made for his escape to Holland, which was happily effected.

 The noble mansion of the late Earl of Marchmont, together with the estate, is now the property of Sir H. H. Campbell, Bart. The late Lady Campbell established the school for infants which bears her name. The parish of Polwarth in 1881 had a population of 227, and in 1891, 203.

The parish of Fogo, which lies to the south of that of Polwarth, is intersected and watered by the Blackadder, upon the right bank of which stream, said to be so fatal to the salmon species, stands the little village of Fogo; and about a mile further up the river is the ancient diminutive hamlet of CHESTERS, occupying the site of a Roman encampment. The parish is six miles in length, by between three and four in breadth, and contains about 4,652 acres; the land is chiefly arable and fertile. A neat church and Board school are in the village. Population in 1881, 468, and in 1891, 420.

RESTON,

AUCHENCROW, GRANT'S HOUSE, RENTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

RESTON is a village pleasantly situated on the banks of the Eye, in the parish of Coldingham, being three miles S. therefrom, the same distance W. from Ayton, and about nine N.E. from Duns. A station on the North British Railway is in the village. The places of worship are a Free church and an Established church, and there is a good Board school. Live stock sales are held every alternate Monday. The population of Reston in 1881 was 321.

AUCHENCROW is a village in the parish of Coldingham, lying between Reston and Chirnside, about two and a half miles from each place. Here is a Board school. The nearest railway station is Reston, two and a half miles distant.

GRANT'S HOUSE is a village or hamlet in the same parish as the above, situated on the road to Edinburgh, seven miles from Coldingham, eight from Ayton, and five from Cockburnspath. The place derives its name from a person named Grant, the contractor for making the high road to Edinburgh, who erected a cottage for himself, now called Grant's House Inn. The North British Railway passes the village, at which there is a station. There is a Free church here, opened in March, 1888.

SWINTON WITH SIMPRIM,

WHITSOME, LADYKIRK AND HORNDALE.

THE parish of SWINTON, to which that of SIMPRIM was united in 1761, is in the district of Merse, and contains 5,561 acres. The parish is intersected by the small river Leet, and near thereto is the neat village of Swinton, lying about 45 miles S.E. of Edinburgh, 12 S.W. of Berwick, and 6 N. of Coldstream. The small village of Simprim is situated at the south-east corner of the parish. The estate of Swinton has been for upwards of seven hundred and fifty years the property of a family of that name, who originally acquired it as a reward for clearing the country of wild boars, or swine, whose mischievous and often ferocious depredations continually troubled and alarmed the inhabitants. The grant was afterwards confirmed by the royal ordinance of Malcolm Canmore, for the exertions of the Swintons in reinstating him on the throne. The celebrated Rev. Thomas Boston, author of the "Fourfold State," was for some time minister of Simprim. A handsome school was erected in 1877 at a cost of £2,000. The nearest railway station is at Duns, six miles distant. In 1881 the united parishes had a population of 964, and in 1891, 847.

WHITSOME, including the abrogated parish of Hilton, is about four miles and a half long and two and a half broad, and contains 4,896 acres. The land is principally composed of a deep rich clay, but there is some extent of marsh or oozy ground. The small village of Whitsome is situated nearly in the centre of the parish at the distance of about 3 miles from Swinton. Edrom is the nearest railway station, distant 3 miles. Population in 1881, 560, and in 1891, 573.

The parish of LADYKIRK lies on the north bank of the Tweed, having the parish of Hutton on the north-east, and Whitsome and Swinton joining it on the margin of the river, with a breadth of from one to two miles, and containing 3,380 acres. The old bridge which spanned the Tweed here has been superseded by a new and handsome one of stone, constructed at the expense of the Tweed Bridges Trust. The church of Ladykirk, a venerable building, stands near the Tweed, about 4 miles from Swinton, and nine from Berwick. Tradition ascribes its erection to the fourth James, in gratitude for his preservation from the violence of the flood when fording the river here at the head of his army. He dedicated the edifice to "Our Lady," hence denominated Ladykirk, which name was subsequently extended to the whole parish, previously designated Upsetlington. There is an elegant but substantial fountain given by Lady Marjoribanks, in commemoration of the fiftieth year of her Majesty's reign. The soil of the district is naturally good from its local situation; cultivation has made it rich and beautiful; and the parish is celebrated for its breed of cattle and sheep. The small village of HORNDEAN belongs to this parish. An annual fair is held in Ladykirk on the 5th of April. The nearest railway station is at Norham, a mile and a half away. Population of the parish in 1881, 438, and in 1891, 339.

WESTRUTHER, HOUNDSLOW AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

WESTRUTHER is a parish, chiefly in the Lammermoor district. The village, a small one, is 82 miles S.E. from Edinburgh, 8 N.E. from Lauder, 6 W. by N. from Greenlaw, and 5 N. from Gordon, situated on the road between Lauder and Duns. The parish, which is six miles in length by four in breadth, and contains 14,630 acres, is under the best process of husbandry. Spottiswoode, the fine residence of Lady Scott, is in this parish; Wedderlie, the seat of Lord Blantyre, is in the neighbourhood, and the ruins of Ively Castle, the walls of which are pretty entire, stand in the north-eastern corner of the parish. It was one of those castellated mansions of residence and defence that were common on the borders before the union of the two crowns in the reign of James VI. There are two places of worship, one under the Establishment, the other a Free church. There is also a Board school. In this parish is the village of HOUNDSLOW, a straggling assemblage of dwellings. The land in the vicinity is of a barren nature, but great improvements have been made, and every year shows an increased extent under culture. Gordon is the nearest railway station, 5 miles distant. In 1881 the parish had a population of 671, and in 1891, 615.

BUTESHIRE.

THE Islands of BUTE, ARRAN, GREAT and LITTLE CUMBRAY (or Cumbræ), HOLY ISLE, PLADDA, and INCH-MARNOCH, compose this shire, which comprises 217 square miles of land, or 139,440 acres. In point of size it ranks as the twenty-eighth, and in population as the twenty-ninth of Scotch counties. Though far separated from the properly denominated Western Islands, those of Bute statistically constitute a portion of the Hebrides. The northern extremity of Bute projects into the district of Cowal, Argyleshire; and the water division between the island and the latter is often so slender that vessels find a difficulty in navigating the straits, which have obtained the title of the "Kyles of Bute." The southern part forms the western shores of the Firth of Clyde. About the middle it is narrowed by the indentation of bays on either side. The length of the island is about eighteen and its breadth averages five miles. Towards Cowal it is bleak and mountainous, but in the southern parts it consists of green fertile eminences or low hills, either affording excellent pasture, or capable of being cultivated, so as to produce fine crops of barley, oats, &c. The island altogether is distinguished for picturesque beauty, and both the botanist and the geologist will find it a rich field for their respective researches. The antiquary, also, will discover many relics of bygone days existing in the island; among others, the interesting ruins of Rothesay, East and West Kames and Kilmory Castles. Here, as on all the west coast of Scotland, there is a little or no extent of sea beach in comparison with other shores; the marine border is in most places rocky, with several good natural harbours. On the south-eastern side the island is clothed with fine plantations, raised by the taste of the late Marquis of Bute, and the family seat, Mount Stuart, an elegant modern mansion, lies on the woody slope facing the entrance to the Clyde.

The CLIMATE of Buteshire is eminently salubrious; neither mists nor noxious fogs, so prevalent in the east of Scotland, infest it; snow rarely lies on the hills, and the only qualification to its general genial character is a liability to severe and sudden rains. In the interior, in a secluded situation, the late celebrated tragedian, Edmund Kean, erected a cottage, to which he purposed retiring from public life. The view of the island from the sea is enlivened by several other cottages on the different green declivities. Bute has for many years been the place of summer resort, for sea-bathing and ruralization, of the fashionable mercantile gentry of the west, who congregate chiefly in and about Rothesay, its capital, and contribute materially to the vivacity of the place.

The large island of ARRAN lies five miles south-west of Bute, and between the peninsulas of Cantyre and Ayrshire; in form it approaches an oval, extending from north to south twenty miles, and in breadth twelve. While Bute is mostly low and green, Arran is lofty and brown, with many heathy mountains, some of which exceed three thousand feet in altitude. A small portion of the lower grounds are cultivated, but the whole is essentially and characteristically pastoral. There are several remarkable caves; the most distinguished is that on the west, opposite to Campbeltown, called "the King's Cave," from its having afforded shelter to Robert Bruce before he discomfited Baliol, and ascended the throne of Scotland; it is one hundred and twenty feet in length, sixty in height, and forty-eight in width. Arran belongs principally to the Duke of Hamilton, who has on the island an ancient though somewhat modernised seat, called Brodick Castle; it furnished the title of Earl to the chief of the house of Hamilton, who was regent during the minority of Mary Queen of Scots. The island comprehends two parishes, and its villages are Lamlash and Brodick. It was formerly famous for the excellence of its whisky; and coal, freestone, and ironstone are said to lie beneath the surface of the soil. The beautiful little island of INCH-MARNOCH, rising a few miles south-west of Bute, is about a mile in length; near its eastern shore are the ruins of a chapel dedicated to Saint Marnoch. The CUMBRAYS are two small islands, lying in the Firth of Clyde, betwixt the Isle of Bute and Ayrshire; the greater Cumbray lies highest up the Firth, and is two miles and a half in length, by a breadth of one and a half, distant from the coast of Ayrshire about two miles. The capital, and only town on the island, is Millport, a neat little place on the north side, with a harbour. The island forms a parish, to which the lesser Cumbray is attached; this latter island is about a mile in length by half a mile in breadth. These Cumbrays once belonged to the Norwegians, and were frequently the objects of contest with the Scots. The whole of the larger Cumbray is now the property of the Marquis of Bute. The Earl of Eglintoun is the owner of the lesser Cumbray.

The island of Bute at one time contained ten or twelve parish churches, and about thirty hermitages of religious men; the island has now but three parishes, and the shire altogether only seven. The only royal burgh is Rothesay; the county is represented in Parliament by one member, the present representative being Andrew Graham Murray, Esq. Bute gives the title of Marquis to the family of Stuart, a branch of the royal family of Scotland. The Marquis of Bute is descended in a direct line from Sir John Stuart, a son of Robert II., who by his father's grant became possessed of the island of Bute, with the heritable jurisdiction of the county, in which he was confirmed by a charter of his brother, Robert III. The family was elevated to an earldom in the person of Sir James, a privy councillor of Queen Anne, in 1703. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92 was 8,195. According to the returns presented to Government in 1881, the population of the shire was 17,657, and by those for 1891, 18,248. The valuation of the county for 1891-92, exclusive of the burgh of Rothesay, was £86,854.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN,

INCLUDING THE PARISHES OF KILBRIDE AND KILMORY, AND THE VILLAGES OF BRODICK AND LAMLASH, WITH THEIR VICINITIES.

THE ISLE OF ARRAN has been partially described under the head of Buteshire, to which county it belongs. It is divided into two parishes, KILBRIDE and KILMORY. Kilbride parish occupies about one half of the island, on the east side, extending 25 miles in length, by a breadth of from four to six. This parish, and others of the same name, are said to have derived their designation from Saint Bride or Bridget; and the fame of this sainted female seems to have extended over the whole of Britain. The ruins of the old church of Kilbride are still remaining. Another edifice was erected in LAMLASH in 1774, which has been superseded by a new one built in 1885, at the cost of the Duke of Hamilton. The anchorage in Lamlash Bay is reckoned the best in the west of Scotland, affording perfect security to vessels driven by stress of weather from the Irish Channel. The haven forms a natural basin, with the high projecting rocky islet of Holy Island lying at its mouth. On the inner side of the bay is the village, where there is a good inn, called the Lamlash Hotel. In his parish are some tall obelisks, which are supposed to be fragments of Druidical circles, or places of worship. Brodick Castle, the seat of the Duke of Hamilton, is placed on a rocky bank, which rises from the north side of the Bay of Brodick. The bank forms part of a peninsular elevation or shoulder, projecting from the base of Goatfell mountain, which eminence rises nearly 3,000 feet above the level of the sea, and overlooks the three kingdoms. Brodick village contains a very handsome and commodious family hotel, erected by the Duke of Hamilton, facing the new pier, enclosed in spacious grounds, and a splendid view may be obtained from the various apartments of this hotel, including Brodick Bay, Goatfell mountain, and Glenrosa, together with the coasts of Ayrshire and Argyshire. The Duke of Hamilton is superior of the island. The Isle of Arran, which embraces an area of 105,436 statute acres, contained in 1881 a population of 4,762, and in 1891, 4,850.

The parish of KILMORY (Kil-a-Mhoire, or St. Mary's burying place) occupies fully more than half the island of Arran, on its western side, and the kirk of Kilmory, which a few years ago was stripped and rebuilt by His Grace the Duke of Hamilton, at a cost of £1,900, is situated on the southern extremity. "For fertility of soil," as a recent writer remarks, "Kilmory is truly like the Garden of Eden. In the neighbourhood of Lagg Hotel or of the parish church, the district is one of the finest and richest a gracious Providence hath bestowed on man. Dairy produce is abundant, and fair crops are obtained from large fields well laid out with good fences. The hills are of moderate height, and so accessible to culture that every spot is convertible to use." The island is noted for its situation as a herring fishery, but this is pursued by only a comparatively small portion of the inhabitants, chiefly at the north end. The staple industry of the island is agriculture, which, under the fostering care of the Arran Farmers' Society, who hold annual ploughing matches, cattle shows, &c., is attaining to a degree of excellence which will compare favourably with some of the best cultivated districts on the mainland. The majority of the inhabitants are occupiers of small plots of land, but a considerable moiety occupy holdings rented at from about £400 to £800. The smaller tenants taking advantage of the influx of summer visitors find house letting a ready source of providing additional winter comforts, and even those who by industry and thrift have managed to lay up a decent competence, do not hesitate to extemporise for dwellings every available outhouse, in order to place the ordinary house accommodation at the disposal of the incomers. As a summer resort the island is held in high reputation, as, besides possessing a climate highly salubrious—the longevity of the people being remarkable—it presents ample opportunities for boating, sea, and trout fishing, botanical and zoological researches, and kindred outdoor pursuits. All the streams, many of which afford tolerably good sport to the careful angler, are free to all comers, except two in the neighbourhood of Dabhcharadh Shooting Lodge. Game is abundant, as it is also scrupulously preserved by his Grace the Duke of Hamilton, who, however, places no restriction on the peregrinations of excursionists, prosecution for trespass being unknown on the island. A good road runs along the shore for the whole circuit of the island, a distance of 55½ miles, while two roads cut across from shore to shore—one from Lagg to Lamlash, and the other from Shiskine to Brodick. Following the road along the shore, 24 miles of the distance traversed are within the limits of Kilbride parish, and the remaining 31½ miles within Kilmory parish. Till the last twenty or thirty years scarcely any part of Arran, beyond the Brodick district—always rich in woodland—could boast of trees;

now, however, by the exertions of the Duke of Hamilton's foresters plantations of considerable extent and growth form a special feature of attraction in various localities, the beautiful and wooded glen of Lagg, in Kilmory parish, and other sequestered spots, presenting a combination of scenery which never fails to "satisfy the eye and make the mind glad." The island is copiously watered by the numerous streams issuing on either side from the "great backbone of mountain rock" extending from north to south. Its natural beauties have again and again formed the subject for the artist's pencil and the poet's theme. Mountain, rock, and glen, and deep ravine, and gushing stream, appearing in panoramic succession, form a pleasing background to the belt of green pasture slopes and cultivated land, which, for the most part, fringe the seaboard of the island. Fairs are held at Brodick on the first Tuesday after the 20th of June, and at Lamlash in the months of April and October. Population of the parish of Kilmory in 1881, 2,742, and of the parish of Kilbride, 2,020; in 1891 Kilmory had a population of 2,514, and Kilbride, 2,336.

MILLPORT (ISLE OF CUMBRAY.)

THE ISLES OF CUMBRAY (or Cumbræ) have been already noticed on a preceding page, in the description of Bute. Millport is a burgh, constituted 1864, under the Act 23 and 24 Vic., cap. 96, and is governed by commissioners and a senior and two junior magistrates. It is chiefly resorted to for sea bathing, being charmingly situated on the south side of the greater Cumbray about four miles from Largs, in Ayrshire, between which town, as well as Greenock and Glasgow, communication is maintained by means of a regular service of steamers. The excellent harbour and pier here present perfect convenience for the landing or embarkation of passengers. A century ago this place possessed only one dwelling, the hut of a fisherman. The number of inhabitants in the two Cumbrays amounts at the present time to about 1,750, of whom a considerable proportion are resident in Millport; and in the summer months, from the influx of visitors, a life and bustle is exhibited which forms an agreeable contrast to the quietude prevailing in other parts of the Isles. The village is gaslighted, a parochial board exists, a sheriff and small debts court is held in March and September, and a bowling green, splendid golfing links, and choral society are established. Picturously situated on the shore is a beautiful marine pavilion, in the pointed style of architecture, belonging to the Marquis of Bute, who is now owner of the whole of the larger Cumbray. The principal object of attraction is the Episcopal College and Church, a beautiful Gothic erection, situated on an eminence overlooking the town and bay, founded and endowed by the Hon. George F. Boyle, and opened in 1850-51. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a plain edifice, with a handsome quadrangular tower; an Episcopal church, a Free church, United Presbyterian church, and a Baptist chapel. There is also a Board school. The inhabitants of these isles are a class remarkable for their industrious habits—chiefly fishermen and owners of their own boats. Some parts of the greater Cumbrae are well cultivated, producing good wheat, and here and there may be seen some thriving plantations. On the western side of the lesser Cumbrae is a lighthouse. This isle is the property of the Earl of Eglinton.

ROTHESAY,

KAMESBURGH (OR PORT BANNATTYNE), ASCOG, KILCHATTAN, KINGARTH, KERRYCROY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ROTHESAY is a royal burgh, a town of great antiquity, and the capital of its parish, 96 miles w. from Edinburgh (by Mid-Calder), 40 s.w. from Glasgow, 18 s.w. from Greenock, 22 n. from Lamlash, in the Isle of Arran, 12 n.w. from Cumbrae, and 9 n.w. from Largs; finely situated at the head of a bay called Roth-say, on the east side of the island of Bute, of which it is the capital, as well as of the shire. The origin of Roth-say was its castle, whose ruins yet exist, and the following are considered as some of the most remarkable particulars respecting it. The first mention of it in history is in 1228, when it was besieged by Hushac, the Norwegian, in conjunction with Olave, King of Man, and taken after a stout resistance. Having been recovered from the northern invaders, it was again taken by them about the year 1253, and retaken by the Scots shortly after the battle of Largs. It was seized by the English during the reign of John Balliol, but in 1311 it surrendered to Robert Bruce. In 1334, Edward Balliol retook the castle, and fortified it; it soon afterwards, however, submitted to Bruce, the steward of Scotland. King Robert II. visited this castle in 1376, in 1381, and in 1392, and subsequently created his eldest son, Prince David, Duke of Roth-say, which has ever since been the principal Scottish title of the heir apparent.

The herring fishery, which has long been active here, caused a great revival in Roth-say, and stimulated the restoration of decayed buildings, and the erection of new ones. Three branch banks and one for savings, and several comfortable hotels are in the town. The lodging houses are very numerous, and upon every scale. Three newspapers are published here—the Buteman, the Roth-say Chronicle, and the Roth-say Express. About a mile to the east of the town is a salutary mineral spring; near this is Glenburn House Hydropathic Establishment. The bay is very spacious, and the anchorage ground excellent. A pier, erected in 18-2, has since been enlarged, and the harbour much improved and deepened at very considerable expense. The Norman Stewart Institute was opened on 4th July, 18-5, by Provost Sharp. The Working Men's Club, Bute Women's Temperance Prayer Union, Roth-say Young Women's Christian Association, and other similar organisations have the most sumptuous accommodation provided for them in this noble institute, which has been erected in Montague street at a cost of £10,000 partly by funds bequeathed by the late Mr. Norman Stewart, of Richmond, Virginia, but mainly by his nephews, Messrs. John, Daniel, and Bryce Stewart, of America, natives of Roth-say. There is a large and ban some refreshment room on the ground floor, and on the upper floors there are amply-supplied reading and waiting rooms, billiard room and recreation and smoking rooms.

The site of a battery which was erected early in the present century, when Napoleon threatened to invade Britain, on a point adjoining Mount Stuart road, on the shore of the east bay, is now occupied by the Roth-say Royal Aquarium. In front of the east pier, an elegant fountain has been erected, as a memorial of the late Prince Consort, and another neat fountain stands in Guildford square. The Town Hall and County buildings were rebuilt at an expense of upwards of £9,000, raised by assessments on the county and burgh, and by subscriptions. They form a handsome pile, and are ornamented with an elegant castellated tower, containing a bell and clock having four transparent dials, which at night are illuminated; the clock was the gift of the late Marquis of Bute. The edifice comprises a spacious court room, in which the sheriff burgh, and justice of peace courts are held, and the town and sheriff clerks' and pro-curator fiscal's offices, with other requisite apartments. At the east end of the court house is a painting of the late Lord Bute, by Mr. Graham Gilbert. Beneath the court room is the prison, which was enlarged in 1870, but is now closed. The new public halls are a pile of buildings facing Prince's pier, and are used for concerts, lectures, public meetings, &c., seating upwards of 1,350 persons. There are several good schools and academies in the town; amongst the latter is the Roth-say Academy and the Thomson Institute, which was erected and partially endowed by the trustees of the late Duncan Thomson, Esq., A.D.-G. Bute. It provides a course of classical and general education, suited to the demand of the present time. The building is a noble pile, in the Gothic style of architecture, and occupies a commanding site on the rising ground of the west bay, in the middle of a park kindly presented by the present Marquis of Bute. The Academy has been transferred to the School Board of the burgh.

Roth-say was erected into a royal burgh by Robert III., under charter dated 12th January, 1400; and its privileges were confirmed and extended by James VI. in 1584. The government of the town is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a town treasurer, and twelve councillors. The sheriff and commissary courts are held every Tuesday and Thursday, and quarter sessions on the first Tuesday in the months of March, May, and August, and the last Tuesday in October, and all criminal cases for the circuit court judiciary are tried at Glasgow. The list of places of worship will be found at the end of the Directory of the town. In the neighbourhood of the town are many mansions of the nobility and gentry. About 5 miles S.E. is Mount Stuart, the beautiful and romantic seat of the Marquis of Bute. About 2 miles S.W., and at the end of the Chapelton road, is Woodend, or (as it is more generally denominated) "Kean's Cottage," from having been built by that eminent tragedian; the house stands in a sweet retired spot, a little above the western shore of Loch Fod, whose waters are usefully employed in propelling the machinery of various mills. The climate of Bute being very salutary, from its mildness, to those afflicted with pulmonary complaints, the faculty recommend numerous patients to the balmy influence of Roth-say. The parish of Roth-say extends over an area of 6,083 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 8,538, and in 1891 9,034.

KAMESBURGH or Port Bannattynne (the latter being better known), is situated 2½ miles N. from Roth-say, and is a fish-curing station. This branch of industry is, however, not prosecuted extensively at the present time. The port possesses a small quay and pier, and there are several well-furnished houses, the latter occupied principally by the families who make this pleasant village a summer retreat. Half a mile distant is the ancient Castle of Kames, the property of the Marquis of Bute. Nearly a mile to the west is the church of North Bute, erected in 1836, at an expense of £1,000, defrayed by the late Marquis of Bute; and in the village is the Free church, erected in 1813. St. Ninian's chapel of ease, in connection with the Established Church, was opened in July, 1886, the cost of erection being about £5,000. Population returned with Roth-say.

ASCOG, about 3 miles S.E. from Roth-say, is situated on a lovely bay. There are many elegant mansions and villas here, and on a point of rock jutting out into the water is a neat Free church, in the grounds of which, to the east, rest the remains of the famous painter, Montague Stanley. At the extreme south end of the island, above Dunnagoy Bay, there stands an extensive vitrified fort, and on the summit of a gentle eminence, called Chapel hill, rising above Argyle street, were the remains of the ancient chapel of St. Bride, removed when improving the hill. The Bute Farmers' Society has done much for the agriculture and farm stock of the island, premiums and prizes for which are awarded at the annual show, which is held in Roth-say in May. A nominal weekly market is held on Wednesday, and fairs on the first Wednesday in May, third Wednesday and the following Thursday in July, the last Wednesday in October, and Tuesday before Kilbarchan December fair—all chiefly for cattle.

Four miles S.E. from Roth-say is KERRYCROY hamlet, pleasantly situated on Scouting Bay, the village to which a crescent round the strand. The entrance to Mount Stuart policies commences here, and between the village and Ascog is a Board school.

KILCHATTAN village, about 8 miles S. of Roth-say, is beautifully situated on a bay of the same name. Within a short distance is the parish church of KINGARTH, an elegant modern edifice, and in the village are a Free church and schools. Half a mile from the east shore are the remains of a Druidical circle, and towards the west shore, and also near the north-east shore of the bay, are several other interesting Druidical remains. In the neighbourhood of Kilchattan is the curious promontory of Garrochhead; about a mile to the south of this, in a quiet romantic dell, stand the remains of the church or chapel of St. Blane, and about a mile south-west from St. Blane's chapel is the vitrified fort of Dunnagoy. The area of the parish of Kingarth is 8,395 statute acres, and in 1881 its population numbered 1,260, and in 1891, 1,062.

CAITHNESS-SHIRE.

THIS is the most northerly county of Great Britain, lying on the north-eastern extremity of Scotland. It is bounded by the German Ocean on the east, by Sutherlandshire on the south and south-west, and the Pentland Firth on the north separate the mainland from the Orkney Islands. In figure the county approaches to that of a triangle, and is nearly forty miles in length, and about thirty in breadth at the middle; altogether it comprehends an area of 685 square miles, or 488,878 acres. This county in point of size ranks as the thirteenth, and in population as the twenty-second.

The EARLY HISTORY of this county is of little or no interest, owing to its distance from the central part of the kingdom. It was anciently inhabited by the Catini, from whom the present appellation is supposed to be derived. The names of various places and the monumental remains indicate its having been the theatre of numerous petty exploits of the Danes and Norwegians. The ruins of Castle Sinclair and Girnago, the remains of old chapels, and other relics of antiquity combine to prove that this district was inhabited at an early date. Caithness is an earldom in the family of Sinclair. This peerage is of remote antiquity; before the year 1450 it was enjoyed by three successive families, who lost it either by forfeiture or extinction. At length it was renewed in the person of William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney, a great-grandson, by the female line, of Robert II.; he was made Chancellor of Scotland in the reign of James II., and received a grant of the earldom of Caithness. The earldom of Orkney having been derived from the King of Norway, though confirmed by a Scottish monarch, was resigned to the crown in the reign of James III. After a long period the title was revived, but not in the family of the Sinclairs of Caithness.

SOIL, SURFACE, PRODUCE, CLIMATE, &c.—The county is in general level, with a few mountains on the borders of Sutherlandshire, and some eminences of trifling altitude throughout. The soil is chiefly devoted to tillage, and in the centre and along the sea border is moderately fertile. This district is nearly destitute of wood, and the few enclosures are but of a rude quality. The greatest elevations in this county above the level of the sea are, Maiden's Paps, 2,000 ft.; Scarry Hills, 1,876 ft.; and Ord of Caithness, 1,250 ft. Although improvements have certainly been effected, much remains to be done to raise the condition of Caithness-shire to that of the adjacent counties. Since the year 1809 a better system of farming has been introduced, and the number of roads throughout the county has been augmented. Though black cattle form an article of consideration, this is rather an agricultural than a grazing county; clover and turnips are pretty broadly cultivated, and the crops of grain are mostly limited to oats and beans, both of good quality. Besides cattle and corn, kelp, salmon, cod, herrings, bacon, with some butter and cheese, and a considerable quantity of wool, comprise the articles of exportation; the imports being foreign timber, coal, salt, flour, and general merchandise. The mountains abound with red deer and various kinds of game, and the district throughout with hares, rabbits, grouse, plovers, &c. In the caverns along the coast seals form their harbours; the hunters enter in small boats, with torches, and with loud shouts alarm the animals, which they kill with clubs as they attempt to pass into the sea. This county has no coal, and the principal fuel of the inhabitants is peat. The chief mineral production is flagstones, used for flooring, pavement, &c., these stones being well known for their durability; and in the quarrying and dressing of which many men are employed. Ironstone and freestone of excellent quality are also found. The white and herring fishery is prosecuted with success, and the curing of fish is another branch of trade in which many persons are engaged. The CLIMATE, though by no means genial and mild, is temperate, considering its high latitude (fifty-ninth degree), where the duration of the night at one period of the year is nineteen hours.

RIVERS, LAKES, RAILWAYS, &c.—In the interior there are upwards of thirty small fresh water lakes, from which flow a number of streamlets and some waters of greater magnitude; the principal among the latter are Forss and Thurso rivers on the north-west, and Wick and Berrydale on the south-east. The most extensive loch is the Watten, a fine sheet of water, about three miles in length, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. The only bays of note are Sinclair Bay, on the north-east, and Cannes Bay on the north. The county is greatly benefited by means of the Highland railway, the towns of Wick, Thurso, &c., now being placed in direct communication with all parts of the country.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Caithness-shire was anciently a bishopric, the earliest traces of which refer its origin to the twelfth century; at present it contains ten parishes, which constitute a presbytery. The shire contains one royal burgh—Wick, and a burgh of barony—Thurso. The county sends one member to Parliament, and Wick joined with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain, and Cromarty, elects another representative. The present member for the county is Gavin Brown Clark, Esq., M.P. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92 was 3,936. The Duke of Portland is lord lieutenant and vice admiral of the county. By the census returns for 1881, the entire county contained a population of 38,865, and by those for 1891, 37,161. The valuation of the county for 1891-92, exclusive of railways, was £121,987, and of railways, £8,690.

LYBSTER IN LATHERON,

DUNBEATH, BERRIEDALE, BRUAN, SWINEY, TORBEG, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LYBSTER is a village in the parish of LATHERON, 13 miles s. from Wick, and 25 n. from Helmsdale, situated on the south-east side of the county. The parish extends from the Ord of Caithness 37 miles along the coast, by a breadth of from 13 to 15 miles. The houses are substantially built and regularly laid out, and in the suburbs are some which are entitled to come under the description of neat and handsome residences. No port from Cromarty to the Orkney Isles has greater claims on the attention of the mariner, nor has any been more successfully or beneficially employed for the purpose of the herring fishery. From the indentation of its coast, with bold headlands at either side, which throw off the sweeping currents so general on the Caithness shores, there is comparatively still water at the entrance, and perfect security within the harbour. The "Brothers Port," the name bequeathed to this haven by the Scandinavians, who settled in Caithness in the eighth and tenth centuries, appears to have been much resorted to by these "sea-kings," or pirates; but it was subsequently destroyed by a devastating land-flood, which choked up the small river that flowed into it with trees, earth, moss and stone; and thus converted into a solid beach and corn-field what theretofore was capable of affording shelter and safety to the largest ships of the present day. However, from the progress already made in clearing out this obstruction, there can be no doubt that, at an incredibly small expense, the importance of this valuable harbour may be increased even beyond its ancient reputation. A proof of the disastrous occurrence just related is furnished by the fact that, but an inconsiderable time since, mooring ringbolts were to be seen at a rock three hundred yards from the present high water mark. Upon a contiguous eminence the ruins of a Roman Catholic chapel, and some well-carved relics in Morayshire freestone, still survive the lapse of time. A good road intersects the parish along the shore, and on this road are some pretty cottages. A church of the Establishment and a Free church are the places of worship, and with these are connected schools. Latheron kirk stands half way on the coast near to a road that crosses the country to Thurso. DUNBEATH, BERRIEDALE, BRUAN, SWINEY, and TORBEG are also villages in Latheron parish. A cattle fair is held at Lybster on the second Tuesday in November, and a sort of market for engaging men for the arduous employment of the fishing season takes place on the 20th of July. The parish of Latheron embraces 119,559 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 6,670, and in 1891, 5,874.

THURSO,

CASTLETOWN IN OLRIG, REAY HALKIRK, AND DUNNET.

THURSO is a town and burgh of barony, in the parish of its name, nearly 290 miles N. from Edinburgh, 20½ N.W. from Wick, the same distance W. from John o'Groats, 46 E. from Tongue, and 96 from Bonar Bridge, by the way of Tongue and the western road. Thurso is situated on the north-west coast of the county, at the head of a spacious bay, surrounded by a rocky coast; and its headlands forming a bow, render it one of the finest bays in the kingdom. Here the turbulent waves of the Pentland Firth and the powerful currents find resistance in the east by Dunnet Head, which stretches out its rocky promontory with a precipitous front, whilst the furious winds from the west are checked in their wild career by the Holburn Head. The original name of Thurso, and what it is still called in the Gaelic language, is "Inverhorsa;" inver signifying the mouth of a river. It is said, and with probability, that the name is derived from Horsa, a Saxon general, who landed in the fifth century. The Danes were the earliest possessors of Caithness. Torfeus, the Danish historian, mentions that in the beginning of the eleventh century, Count Moddan quartered his army at Thurso, which he terms "The Town of Caithness," and that they were plentifully supplied with spoil from the neighbourhood, till subdued by Thorkel. He adds that Moddan had his camp on the promontory of Thurso, where vestiges of a wall, which fortified it, may still be perceived. Dr. Barry states that Earl Erland, in the time of Malcolm II., King of Scotland, about the year 1005 resided for the most part at Thurso. Buchanan mentions many battles between Malcolm and the Danes in Moray, which in those times comprehended Caithness and all the northern counties of Scotland. We find, by one of the statutes of King David of Scotland, that the weights and measures of Caithness, or Thurso, were the standard for Scotland. Vessels of any burthen may find shelter in the bay in any weather, and few places possess superior advantages for refuge to the mariner than Scrabster Roads, as it is called. A promenade has been constructed facing the sea, at the expense of the inhabitants of the town; it is upwards of 300 yards in length. The town, which is situated on the left bank of the river, is neat, clean, and rapidly increasing in size. There is a line of railway in connection with the Sutherland and Highland railway, which affords direct communication between Wick, Thurso and the South. The walks in the neighbourhood of the town are romantic, and some approach close to the edge of the precipitous cliffs overhanging the sea. The river, too, is beautiful, and famed for the almost miraculous draughts of salmon occasionally taken. Either bank is connected by an elegant stone bridge, but the want of a better pier is much felt, as vessels intending to enter must wait the tide before they can cross the bar. This is a great inconvenience to the main export of the place, which consists of "Caithness pavement," an article in great demand, the manufacture of which is carried on to a prodigious extent, and involves the prosperity of the place. The peculiar excellence belonging to this staple is its durability, its resistance to moisture, and its retention of an unbroken surface. Specimens may be seen in the houses of Parliament, London, and many public buildings throughout the United Kingdom. Nowhere in Scotland has agricultural progress been so rapid as in Caithness. The industry and energy of the farmer generally rise in proportion to the obstacles which nature presents. Immense tracts of heath land, which would have been left uncultivated in the fertile Lowlands, have been subjected to the plough, whilst many thousands of acres of bog and swamp have been drained. The monetary establishments are branches of the Bank of Scotland, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Commercial Bank, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, the British Linen Co. Bank, and a Savings Bank. Thurso is a burgh of barony, holden of Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair, Bart., as superior.

The places of worship are the parish church, two Free churches, and chapels for the Original Seceders and Independents, and an Episcopal church. The church of the establishment is a neat Gothic structure, with a tower and clock—the latter presented by the late Henry Miller, Esq., of London, but a native of Thurso. The first Free church is conspicuous for its elegance of architecture. There are public and Free Church schools, well conducted and attended. At the top of Sinclair street is an institution endowed by Alexander Miller, Esq., and erected for the purpose of affording education to boys. A hospital has been erected at a cost of about £6,000, the money for which was left by the late Mr. Dunbar, of Scrabster, and was opened for the admission of patients in May, 1885. The building is a very handsome one; the foundation stone was laid by H.R.H. the Duke of Edinburgh in 1881. A little to the east of the town stands Thurso Castle, the seat of Sir John George Tollemache Sinclair, Bart., which within the last few years has been greatly enlarged and modernised. Thurso parish gave birth to Richard Oswald, Esq., one of the plenipotentiaries from the Court of St. James for settling the peace of 1783. It is also the birthplace of the late Sir John Sinclair, Bart., of Ulbster, whose name is associated with the Statistical Account of Scotland, which was collected and published in consequence of his indefatigable exertions, and to whose memory a very elegant monument of freestone has been erected on a square piece of ground fronting the Established church; it was presented to the town by Alexander Miller, Esq. The late Robert Dick, an eminent botanist and geologist, was a resident of this town, and his collection of specimens now forms an important part of the Thurso Museum. The weekly market is held on Friday, and the annual fairs on the second Tuesday in July and first Friday in September. By the returns made to Government in 1881, the parish of Thurso, the area of which is 28,049 acres, had a population of 6,217, the town containing 4,055; in 1891 the numbers returned were: for the parish, 5,754; for the town, 3,330.

REAY is a parish about 10 miles W. of Thurso. The Sutherland section of Reay (which is now attached to the parish of Farr, in Sutherlandshire), is somewhat wild and hilly, the highest mountains being Ben Readh and Ben Dorrery. The parish is about 20 miles long, with a breadth of 12 miles, and comprehends an area of 115,301 acres. There is lime, granite, millstone, with traces of lead and iron mineral springs, &c. There are Established and Free churches and schools in the parish. Fairs are held on the Monday before and Tuesday after August 15th. Population of the parish in 1881, 2,191, and in 1891, 2,075.

CASTLETOWN is a small neat village, in the parish of Olrig, situated rather more than 15 miles N.W. of Wick, and nearly 6 E. of Thurso. In the immediate vicinity of the village is the estate of Castlehill, from which is quarried an excellent kind of stone, adapted to the purposes of flooring and flagging footways, &c. It lies in beds of from three-quarters of an inch to six inches in thickness. Blocks have often been raised measuring 100 superficial feet; hence they are carried to the shore, where they are prepared and dressed, previous to shipping, to facilitate which a small and convenient harbour has been formed. The Commercial Bank of Scotland Limited has a branch here. In 1881, the parish of Olrig had a population of 2,002, and in 1891, 1,833, Castletown having 816 of that number.

DUNNET, a parish of 16,344 acres, 3 miles N.E. from Castletown, and about 10 miles long by 4 wide, is the most northern part of Scotland. Thurso, 9 miles distant, is the nearest railway station. Dunnet Head is a rock from 100 to 400 feet high, upon which is a light at an altitude of 946 feet, first lighted in 1831, and which is seen by the mariner for 23 miles. There are Established and Free churches, together with schools. Fairs are held on the first Tuesday in April, and last Tuesday in August for cattle horses and pigs. Population in 1881, 1,607, and in 1891, 1,488.

HALKIRK is a parish 7 miles S. of Thurso, about 24 miles in length by a breadth of about 8, and comprises 95,763 acres. It contains about 24 small lakes, abounding with trout, &c. There are Established and Free churches, and public schools. Many ruins may be seen in this parish. The main line of the Sutherland and Caithness railway passes through and has a station here, and there is also a branch of the Caledonian Banking Co. Limited. Population in 1881, 2,705, and in 1891, 2,564.

WICK,

LOUISBURG, PULTENEYTOWN, WATTEN, BOWER, CANISBAY, AND KEISS.

WICK is a parish and royal burgh; the town, a considerable one, improving and flourishing, is 390 miles N. from Edinburgh, 61
N. by E. from Dornoch, and 20 S.W. from Thurso; situated on the north-east coast of Caithness, forming the segment of a circle around the bay of Wick, and along the banks of the river Wick, where it enters the German Ocean. There is a station here on the Highland railway. The town is divided into three parts, viz., PULTENEYTOWN, LOUISBURGH and WICK. The old town, or rather Wick proper, is composed of the High street and Bridge street; the former runs from the bay along the curvature of the river, and is flanked on either side by several lanes. Bridge street, more regular in its construction, is ornamented by several elegant erections, among which the town and county buildings form a neat and handsome pile, faced with freestone, and surmounted by a cupola with a public clock. The Town Hall has a spacious apartment, containing portraits of the late eminent Sir John Sinclair, and other local celebrities, and which is used as a council room, and for the meetings of the Commissioners of Supply for the county; also the town clerk's and other offices. Within the last few years the aspect of Bridge street has entirely changed, many new buildings, all having architectural features more or less pretentious, having taken the place of the old houses. The Town and County Bank, Limited, the County Court House, the Station Hotel, Wick Free Church, and Brims' and Gunn's buildings make up a total which would not be discreditable to a much larger town. Elegant premises have also been erected in High street for the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. The Temperance Hall, seated for 1,200 people, is the chief place in which public meetings and entertainments are held. STAXIGOE, BROAD-HAVEN, KEISS and SARCLET are suburban villages, populated principally by fishermen, having each a separate harbour. The harbour of Sarclest is now a total wreck, with little prospect of being rebuilt.

PULTENEYTOWN, which may be reckoned the seat of the manufactures, commerce and fisheries of Wick, was purchased when a mere waste by the society in London formed for extending British fisheries, and various means have been adopted to carry out the great and beneficial objects of the society. The local business of the society is managed by an agent, whose residence overlooks the harbours, and who is ex-officio chairman of the Pulteneytown Improvement Commissioners, who, under a special Act of Parliament, have the oversight of lighting and cleansing the town, for which an assessment is imposed. The feus and rental of Pulteneytown go into the revenue of the British Fisheries Society. The port of Wick consists of two harbours of fair dimensions, which are now being greatly improved by deepening, so that the fishing fleet can enter at all states of the tide. A breakwater was constructed at a cost of about £120,000, but this magnificent erection is now no longer to be seen, having been demolished by the fearful storms which sweep across the North Sea from the north-east, and spend their force upon the Caithness coast. Owing to the excessively perilous nature of the east coast fishing ground, a deep sea harbour is imperatively needed here to prevent the frequently recurring disasters which take place along the coast. The harbours, which were formerly under the care of the British Fisheries Society, were some years ago handed over to the Pulteneytown Harbour Trust, by special Act of Parliament. While the royal burgh of Wick can trace its history back for centuries, Pulteneytown can only speak of its generations, and so much more fortunate is it in this respect, that while Wick and Louisburgh consist chiefly of closes and lanes, Pulteneytown has been from the first laid out on a settled plan. Its regular streets, squares and terraces compare favourably with that of any northern town. Here most of the work of the town is done. Its cooperages, net, rope, and woollen manufactories, saw mills and distillery, employ two-thirds of the whole population. On the Wick side of the river is Messrs. Alexander McEwen & Son's Caithness steam saw mills and cabinet works, and in Pulteneytown are the respective establishments of Messrs. W. & A. Geddes and Mr. David Sutherland, who are engaged in the same business. Pulteneytown is supplied with water from the loch of Hempriggs, and Wick a few years ago brought an abundant water supply from the loch of Yarrows, at a cost of £6,000. Ship building has entirely ceased since the demise of Mr. Bremner, whose engineering talents were successfully employed in floating the Great Britain steamship, which grounded on the coast of Ireland; but the business of boat building is carried on, and with the manufacture of herring barrels and nets is the principal source of employment for the non-fishing class. The herring trade must be taken as the staple, and in the season commencing in July and ending in September, the home fishery is prosecuted to an extent almost unparalleled elsewhere. From May to July the fishermen are busily engaged with the summer fishing at Stornoway and other places in the Western Hebrides. During the home fishing the population is increased by an influx of about five thousand Highlanders, men and women, who come as "hired hands." The scene both on water and land at this time is not to be equalled anywhere. About 600 boats, manned by six men each, set sail every evening for the fishing ground, the distance to which varies from 1½ to 60 miles, and return next morning. The sight, which is unique, is witnessed by spectators who come from all parts of the country. The gutting and curing of the herrings gives labour to hundreds of men and women, and on a busy day the quay presents a scene both animated and picturesque. On all sides one hears the voice of Gaelic and broad Scotch, mingled with French, Dutch, German, and almost every other national tongue. The winter herring, cod and ling fishing is carried on extensively. It brings to the town fish buyers from all the large centres of population in England. The value of fish exported from Wick during a year is computed at about £200,000, the benefit from which is diffused over a wide district. The railway transports the whole winter catch to the southern markets, while the vessels belonging to the port, and a large contingent from other Scotch ports, and also foreign vessels, are busily engaged taking the summer fish to Dantzic, Hamburg, St. Petersburg, and other places on the continent, and various ports in Ireland. Six branch banks are established here, namely, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Town and County Bank, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Bank of Scotland, the British Linen Company, and the North of Scotland Bank, Limited. There is also a National Security Savings Bank, which is well supported. There are three weekly newspapers, the Northern Ensign, the John o' Groat Journal, and the Northern News.

Wick was erected into a royal burgh in the year 1589, by the influence of George, Earl of Caithness, whose principal residence was at the strong castle Gruegoe, concerning the antiquity of which there is no tradition, but by its construction and workmanship it appears to have been of Danish origin. It is situated about two miles from Wick, and the greater part of its walls are still standing. Adjacent to the Castle of Gruegoe is Sinclair Castle, of almost equal antiquity; and near by stands Ackergill Tower. Another interesting ruin in the vicinity is Oliphant Castle, known as the "Old Man of Wick," which along with the lighthouse on Ness Head (one of the best lights around the British Isles) form excellent landmarks to seamen. There are numerous remains of Pictish dwellings in the district; five stone coffins and a number of weapons and a collection of pottery have been found in different parts of the parish. The Duke of Sutherland is superior of Wick, which is the county town of the shire, a Parliamentary burgh and the returning station at elections. It joins with Kirkwall, Dornoch, Dingwall, Tain and Cromarty in returning a member to the Imperial Parliament, its present representative being John Macdonald Cameron, Esq. The government of the town is vested in fifteen councillors, from whom are chosen a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, and a treasurer; their jurisdiction, however, is confined to narrow limits, and the amount of their revenue inconsiderable, being confined to the rental of market dues and some curing stations. There is a justice of the peace court and a sheriff's court, the former sitting every alternate Monday, the latter every Tuesday and Friday, with power to appoint a sitting when and where within the county. The customs collection extends from Meikle Ferry to Cape Wrath, with sub-stations at Thurso and Little Ferry. Different foreign states are represented by resident vice-consuls.

There are places of worship of the Establishment and the Free Church of Scotland; the former have one in Wick and one in Pulteneytown, and the latter one in Wick and two in Pulteneytown, and there are others for congregations of United Presbyterians, Independents, Evangelical Union, Baptists, Roman Catholics, and Episcopalians. The United Presbyterians, Independents, and Episcopalians, have built new churches, thereby adding greatly to the architectural beauty of the town. The Pulteneytown Academy was founded and endowed by the British Fisheries Society, but it is now under the control of the burgh School Board. Since the passing of the Education Act, great improvements have been made in the schools of this district. The North and South and West Banks schools are of a chaste and imposing construction, and were erected at great cost. The Free Libraries Act was adopted in the parish of Wick in 1887, and premises for a library and reading room have been fitted up in Union street, Pulteneytown. The Chamber of Commerce is composed of the principal business men in the district, and meets on the first day of January in every year. The Agricultural Society holds an important annual cattle show at Georgemas, on the last Friday in February. A market is held every Friday, and fairs on the 24th June (if Tuesday), or Tuesday after, Tuesday after 20th July, and the first Tuesday after the 17th November (old style); but the stock of the district is generally disposed of at auction sales held at Wick and Thurso. In 1881 the parliamentary burgh of Wick contained a population of 8,026, and in 1891, 8,463.

WATTEN is a parish situated about nine miles W.N.W. of Wick, and is bounded on the north by Bower, and on the east by Wick, on the south by Latheron, and on the west by Halkirk, and has a station on the Highland railway. In the north-west part of the parish, which is of a square figure and measures from 7 to 8 miles each way, there is a fine sheet of water about three miles in length, called Loch Watten, from which issues a branch of the river Wick. There are places of worship in connection with the Established and Free churches, and three Board schools are in the parish. The parish of Watten comprises an area of 30,579 acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 1,406, and in 1891, 1,390.

CANISBAY is a parish 20 miles N.N.W. from Wick, situated on the Pentland Frith, and includes Duncansby Head, John o'Groat's House and Stroms Island. In size it is about 12 miles by 7. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture and fishing. There are Established and Free churches, and five Board schools in the parish. Near Duncansby Head are the famous "Stacks of Duncansby," conical rocks standing isolated in the midst of the sea. Acreage, 26,243. The nearest railway station is Wick or Thurso, each about 20 miles distant. Population in 1881, 3,400.

BOWER is a parish 10 miles N.W. of Wick, and in size is about 11 miles by 8, rising from Heather Cowcain, from which a fine view is obtained. There are Established and Free churches, and four Board schools, and a station on the Highland railway in the parish. Acreage, 19,677. Population in 1881, 1,608, and in 1891, 1,506.

CLACKMANNANSHIRE.

THIS county, the smallest in Scotland in point of size, and the twenty-sixth as regards population, is bounded on the South and west by the Frith of Forth and Stirlingshire, and on the north and east by Perthshire; on the east also it joins for a short distance the county of Fife, and a detached portion of Stirlingshire touches part of its northern verge. Its figure, which is extremely irregular, does not exceed ten miles at its greatest length, nor more than eight at its extreme breadth, and it has an area, which in 1891 was increased by the addition of the parish of Alva, of 53 square miles, or 33,832 statute acres.

Anciently the whole of the valuable territory lying between the rivers Forth and Tay, and bounded on the north-west by the chain of the Ochil Hills, was called Ross, as being a sort of peninsula, terminating at Stirling. In course of time the district of Ross was divided amongst the shires of Fife, Kinross, and Clackmannan, with the introduction of a slip of Perthshire, on the edge of the Forth, in which is situated the town of Culross. Among the ancient structures of the county are three old towers; one of them, near Clackmannan, is said to have been erected by Robert Bruce; another, contiguous to Tillicoultry, is supposed from its similarity of architecture to have been built by the same person, or about the same period; the third, or the Alloa tower, is more particularly noticed in the description of that town. At Dollar are the ruins of Castle Campbell, standing on a lofty eminence, which are also particularised in the description of that village. From the shores of the Forth the surface of the county rises gradually to the Ochil Hills, the highest of which, Benelough, attains the height of 2,000 feet above the level of the sea, and is in the parish of Tillicoultry. The higher grounds are partly pastoral, but the whole of the lower parts adjacent to the Forth are rich, arable, and beautifully enclosed. Besides the Forth the county is watered by two other streams, namely, the Devon and the Black Devon, and it is connected with RAILWAYS by means of branches of the North British and Caledonian lines, communicating with Alloa, Clackmannan, Alva, Tillicoultry, and Dollar.

MANUFACTURES, PRODUCE, &c.—The manufacture of woollen goods, in shawls, plaidings, tartans, &c., has been for many years established in the parishes of Tillicoultry and Alva with complete success, and the towns belonging them have become thriving places in consequence, and furnish employment to many hundreds of persons. At Alloa and Clackmannan, wool spinning is carried on very extensively, the former place being likewise noted for the excellence of the ale brewed there, and also for the distillation of whisky. Throughout the whole county coal is worked, and at various times valuable ores of silver, lead, copper, etc., have been found in the Ochils.

This shire contains four parishes and two portions of parishes; its only towns are Alloa, Clackmannan, Dollar, Tillicoultry, and Alva. The county possesses neither royal nor parliamentary burghs, but it unites with Kinross-shire in returning one member to Parliament. The present representative for the joint counties is the Right Hon. John Blair Balfour, q.c. The parliamentary constituency in 1891-92 was 6,042. The Earl of Mansfield, K.T., is lord lieutenant of the county. The entire county contained, by the census returns of 1881, a population of 25,680, and by those of 1891, 33,011. The valuation of the county for 1891-92, which includes the addition of Alva, was, exclusive of railways, £143,526, and of railways, £11,823.

ALLOA,

WITH SOUTH ALLOA, TULLIBODY, SAUCHIE, AND CAMBUS.

A LLOA, a town of considerable commercial importance, and the leading one of the county, is 30 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 32 S. from Perth, 7 E. from Stirling, the same distance S.W. from Dollar, 5 N.W. from Kincardine, and 3 S.W. from Tillicoultry. The word "Alloa" is supposed to be a corruption of the Celtic words "Aul na g," signifying the way to the sea, or the sea-way. It is situated on the north bank of the River Forth, at the point where the river ends and the Frith begins. At this spot, and for ten miles above it, the water is deep enough to admit vessels of 70 tons. The quay stretches along the bank, and large vessels or steamboats can thus lie close up to the thoroughfare, to the great convenience of passengers, and is the more worthy of appreciation as this is the only port on the Frith at which such can be accomplished with perfect ease and safety at any tide. A dock was constructed in 1863, which is 600 feet long and 150 feet broad, with 21 feet depth of water. Till 1854 Alloa was a burgh of barony, under the management of trustees, but in February of that year the inhabitants adopted the Burgh and Police Act, and in 1863, the Commissioners under that Act unanimously adopted the General Police (Scotland) Act of 1862, known as "Lindsay's Act." The burgh of Alloa is now governed by a board of nine commissioners, constituted agreeably to the provisions of the above Act, one of them acting as chief and two of them as junior magistrates. An ordinary meeting is held on the second Monday in each month, and statutory meetings on the second Monday of the months of January, April, July, and October. The ordinary and small debt courts for the county are held weekly, a sheriff court twice a week, and a justice of the peace court at stated periods, and fairs court annually.

Of late years the town has considerably improved in appearance, many old houses having been removed to make room for others of a modern class. Many public buildings have been added, and constructed in such a style as to enhance the appearance of the town. At the top of Mar street is situated the County Court House, erected in the Flemish style of architecture, at a cost of £2,700; it was opened December 8th, 1865. About the middle of High street is the Corn Exchange, which is used also as a public hall; it was built in 1862, at a cost of £1,150, and is the property of a joint-stock company. Powers having been acquired for feuing the glebe which lies to the west of the town, a new suburb has made its appearance there, the principal building being the Archaeological Museum and Hall. This institution was erected in 1874, and besides furnishing the members of the Archaeological Society with suitable accommodation for their specimens, library and meetings, affords advantages to the public for meetings of a smaller kind to those held in the Corn Exchange; the total cost was about £2,000. At a little distance from this hall a burgh school has been built on the site of the old assembly rooms and parochial school; it was opened in 1876, and accommodates 500 scholars, the cost being about £5,000. In Greenside street are the Paton School and the Greenside chapel. The former was erected in 1865, from a trust fund left by the late Alexander Paton, Esq., of Cowden Park, for educational purposes, and is suitably endowed. The front of the school faces the foot of Candle street, and, with its ornamental tower, presents a handsome appearance. The latter was built by D. Paton, Esq., and placed by him under trustees for the benefit of the Young Men's Christian Association. In Bank street, which is a continuation of Mill street, are the Municipal Buildings. The old Burgh chambers had long been felt to be unsuitable, and in 1872 the Commissioners of the town proceeded to erect the very beautiful buildings which grace the street in which they stand; they are in the Grecian style of architecture, and cost about £4,000. Adjacent to these is the new Post Office, a substantial three-storey building in the classic style of architecture, which was opened on the 13th of November, 1882. The town is extending principally to the north, at Greenfield and Claremont, and eastward along the Clackmannan road. Villas are also rising to the west in rapid succession, adding much to the beauty of the place, amongst which may be mentioned the beautiful mansion of Norwood, the residence of J. Thomson Paton, Esq. It is in the Scottish baronial style, and forms a point of attraction in the approach to Alloa from the west. Beyond it is Arnebrae House, the residence of James Younger, Esq., a fine building in a commanding situation. In 1877 land was acquired by the Commissioners, as a feu, from the Earl of Mar and Kellie, which has been laid out as a public park. It extends over 20 acres, is triangular in shape, and generally level, with the exception of a slight elevation at the north-east corner; it was formally opened on the 1st May, 1878. At the east end of the town a cemetery has been laid out, which covers an area of 6 acres. The Public Hall and Free Library is situated in Mars hill with the main front looking down Church street, and with access to the back from Mar place. It is the gift of John Thomson Paton, Esq., of Norwood, and was designed by Mr. Waterhouse, R.A. of London, in the Gothic style, the large hall being capable of holding 1,000 people. Mr. Paton has also presented an organ to the hall at a cost of about £1,700, and has likewise given £1,000 for the founding of the library, the ratepayers having adopted the Free Libraries Act on the 22nd June, 1886.

The trade of Alloa has been gradually increasing, and it is expected that the improvements and enlargement of the dock will contribute to its further development. In 1871 a bill was obtained giving powers for the construction of new works, and under these powers the Harbour Trust has greatly extended the dock, and have also obtained a powerful steam dredger for keeping the dock and harbour clear of mud. Beside the brewing and yarn trades, for which the town is so noted, many other articles of industry are produced. There are several foundries—iron, copper and brass—extensive bottle works, a pottery, to which has been added a department for glass engraving, machine works, cooperages, saw mills, a ship building yard, where iron ships of the largest size are built, giving employment to a great number of hands, brick and tile manufactories, and a dye-wood works. The collieries around Alloa are very numerous and the export trade of the port depends to a large extent upon them.

There are five branch banking establishments—the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Royal Bank of Scotland, together with a Bank for Savings. Four newspapers are published in Alloa weekly—the Advertiser, the Circular, the Journal, and the Weekly News. Immense quantities of whisky are manufactured here, the Carsebridge Distillery, one of the largest in the kingdom, being capable of producing from 50,000 to 60,000 gallons of proof spirit weekly, and the quantity and quality of the ale exceed those of any other town in Scotland. The exports comprise ale, whisky, glass bottles, coals, wool, and woollen goods; the imports are timber, oak, bark, hides, butter, cheese, and large supplies of grain for malting. The latter forms now a principal feature in the imports; large vessels of 600 or 700 tons may be seen discharging here at one time. Communication with Edinburgh, Stirling, and the towns of the Forth is afforded by steamboats throughout the year, and the ferry steamboat crosses every hour to South Alloa on the opposite side of the Forth where are extensive timber yards, and also a terminus of a branch of the Caledonian railway. A free shipping tidal port is formed at this part of the Forth. The great depth of water, together with the facility of railway transit, show this locality as eminently eligible for the purpose, as is proved by the fact of the large number of vessels daily arriving. Alloa is well supplied with railway accommodation. The North British line from Stirling divides here, one branch going to Dunfermline and one to Kinross. In 1878 an Act was obtained in Parliament for the purpose of making a railway from the South Alloa branch of the Caledonian line to the town, with a bridge over the Forth, the undertaking being promoted by an independent company, backed by the Caledonian Company, who subscribed £30,000 of the capital. The foundation stone of the bridge was laid on the 5th of April, 1882, and has been successfully completed. It consists of 17 spans, two of 100 feet, two of 80 feet, and 13 of 68 feet, the piers on which the girders rest rising to a height of 24 feet above high water mark. In the fairway of the channel are two opening spans of 60 feet each which turn on a massive central pier, consisting of six cylindrical columns, to permit of vessels passing up and down the river. Each of the girders was tested with a pressure reaching to 2 cwt. to each foot of space. The bridge, which has one line of rails, is 17 feet in breadth outside, and 14 feet inside the girders; the estimated cost of the line and bridge was £64,000. Messrs. Watt & Wilson, of Glasgow, were the contractors. With this improved train service both by the North British and Caledonian Companies, a commodious joint station has been erected a little east of the old one, at the head of Primrose street.

The parish church, which was first opened for divine worship on the 24th of June, 1819, forms one of the most prominent objects in the town. It is a fine structure, in the pointed style of architecture, being raised at an expense of £3,000. The spire is very handsome, and was added to the tower by public subscription; the Earl of Mar considerably improving it by giving a bell and a fine clock. St. Andrew's chapel of ease, in the early English style of architecture, and presenting a simple though massive appearance, was opened on the 26th of November, 1882. The other places of worship are two Free churches, two United Presbyterian churches, a Baptist chapel, an Episcopalian church, with a peal of bells, a Roman Catholic chapel, and one for Swedenborgians. The Alloa Hospital, which was instituted in February, 1867, mainly through the liberality of the late Earl of Kellie, is designed for the medical and surgical treatment of persons in the county of Clackmannan suffering from disease or accident. A detached building is available to the local authorities of the burgh and parish of Alloa for the reception of persons suffering from infectious diseases. It is under the management of a committee who are annually appointed from the subscribers, and is supported by voluntary subscriptions. Of educational institutions, the first to be mentioned under the School Board is the Alloa Day Home, which, in addition, was formerly a ragged school, and was instituted on the 29th of January, 1884, to aid in securing the elementary education of poor and neglected children in Alloa by providing superintendence and one or more meals a day. There are three other Board schools—the Burgh school, the Lodge school, and the Academy, besides which there are also a Roman Catholic, an Episcopalian, and the Paton Endowed school. In winter three curling clubs meet on their respective ponds to practise the "roaring game." The town is well supplied with gas, the Alloa gas works, which were up to 1887 in the possession of a private company, being now the property of the Commissioners, having been acquired by them at a cost of £23,250, the amount fixed by the valuers. Until 1823, the town was very badly supplied with water, but in that year a supply was obtained from a large artificial loch known as Gartmorn Dam, which covers 160 acres of ground; and in 1867, the supply being again inadequate, two large filtering beds were constructed in addition, the water being conveyed to the town through 10-inch and 12-inch main pipes; the total cost of the waterworks up to the present time is £30,000.

Alloa, in its immediate neighbourhood, presents scenery at once beautiful, bold and picturesque. On the north side is the range of the Ochil hills, covered with verdure to their very summits, and which are, perhaps, unrivalled in Scottish landscape; whilst the south displays the Forth in all its natural splendour. Stirling Castle on the west, and the Alloa and Clackmannan Towers on the east, present to the eye a panorama of no common loveliness. The noble and ancient family of Mar have long been the proprietors of this place. They forfeited the earldom by their participation in the rebellion of 1715, but the title and privileges were restored in June, 1824. All-a Tower was the residence of this family. It was a quadrangular building, but was in 1800 destroyed by fire, and the square tower now standing is all that remains of the ancient structure, though it is still a place of great strength. The walls are eleven feet thick, and the highest turret is eighty-nine feet. It was built by the sovereigns of Scotland previous to the thirteenth century, and is a stately remnant of feudal grandeur. It has frequently been the resort and residence of royalty. The beautiful and unfortunate Mary spent a portion of her youth and maturity with the Mar family, her son James also passed many of his youthful days here, having been committed by his mother to the then Earl of Mar; and his son, Prince Henry, received a part of his education in this building under the celebrated George Buchanan. The prospect from the summit is beautiful and extensive, and worthy the attention of the tourist and stranger. The Tower is now uninhabited. Alloa House, now the residence of the Earl of Mar and Kellie, stands a short distance eastward from the Tower, and was erected in 1834, but has since been much added to and improved. Alloa market is held on Saturday. Cattle fairs are held on the second Wednesday in February, April, May, August, and November, all new style; and a hiring fair on the second Saturday in October. The parish of Alloa is in the Presbytery of Stirling, and embraces an area of 5,499 statute acres, with a population, in 1871, of 9,940, and in 1881 of 11,628, the burgh at the latter period containing 8,812.

CAMBUS is a small village situated on the Forth in the old parish of Tullibody, 2 miles w. from Alloa and 5 from Stirling. It is also a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline section of the North British railway, and the branch line to Alva here joins the main line. The river Devon at this point discharges itself into the Forth, and there is a pier where small vessels are enabled to discharge and load. Brewing and distilling are extensively carried on here. Population in 1881, 209.

SOUTH ALLOA is a village and seaport in the parish of Airth, situated on the south bank of the Forth, opposite to Alloa, in the county of Stirling; it is crossed by a ferry. There is a branch of the Caledonian railway to this place from Larbert for goods traffic.

SAUCHIE (New and Old) are populous villages immediately contiguous to each other, in the parishes of Alloa and Clackmannan, nearly two miles north of Alloa, on the road to Alva. There is an Established church here, which was built in the year 1844, and the district is now formed into a quoad sacra parish. A great number of colliers, employed by the Alloa Company, reside in these villages, and there is a Sunday school for their children maintained by an endowment known as Lady Charlotte Erskine's. A fine Board school, with accommodation for 360 scholars, has been built at FISHERCROSS, where the Sauchie railway station is, and also one at HOLTON at the other end of the district, to replace the old colliery school. The station here is on the Devon Valley section of the North British railway.

TULLIBODY parish was united to that of Alloa about the time of the Reformation, and the village is situated 2 miles w. from that town. The ancient kirk of Tullibody, the date of which is 1549, was unroofed under circumstances of a peculiar character. In the year 1559 it was made to serve the purpose of a bridge across the Devon for the French troops when they retreated before the English. The church continued in a dismantled condition for upwards of two centuries, when it was again covered in by George Abercrombie, Esq., of Tullibody, and occasional services are now held in it. There is also a very neat Free church, erected in 1845, adjoining the old kirk, and there is a Board school in the village. CAMBUS is the nearest railway station. Population in 1881, 694.

ALVA.

THE burgh of ALVA, which is now a thriving one, is in the parish of that name, and is also a station on the Alva branch of the Stirling and Dunfermline section of the North British Railway. The town is 7 m l s.n.e. from Stirling, 3½ s. from Alloa, 2 w. from Tillicoultry, and 5 w. from Dollar, charmingly situated at the foot of the Ochils, whence issues a stream that turns several mills, and forms, in its course through the romantic and interesting glen of Alva, three beautiful cataracts. The largest of the falls issues from an aperture in the rock above and tumbles from a height of forty feet in one unbroken mass into a naturally formed ha in below. An excellent pathway has been formed through the glen, which tourists now visit from all quarters. The parish, formerly connected judiciously with Stirlingshire, and politically with Clackmannanshire, has been enlarged by the boundary Commissioners of Scotland to nearly double its former size, and is now wholly situated in the county of Clackmannan. It affords excellent pasture, is well cultivated, and the hills abound with valuable ores, such as silver, copper, iron and lead. Sir John Erskine, of Alva, about the year 1715, assisted by some miners from Leadhills, discovered a very rich vein of silver, in a romantic glen, about midway between Alva House and the town. The precious metal made its appearance in small threads, which, upon being followed, led to a very rich mass of ore; some of it was so rich that fourteen ounces of ore yielded twelve ounces of silver. So easily was the deposit of treasure reached, that not more than £50 sterling had been expended on it when the prize was found; and during the space of a little more than three months it is said that ore was obtained from which Sir John drew from £40,000 to £50,000. After this mass was exhausted, the ore became so scarce as not to repay the expense of working, and hence the enterprise was abandoned. In the year 1767, Lord Alva, nephew to Sir John Erskine, caused a pair of communion cups to be made, for the use of the church of Alva, from some of the remains of that ore then in his possession. On these the following inscription is engraved, "Sacris in Ecclesia S. Servani, apud Alveth, A.D., MDCCCLVII., ex argento, indigena, D.D. Cq.—Jacobus Erskine."

The manufacture of woollen goods, consisting of shawls, tweeds, tartans, &c., is carried on in the town and its neighbourhood very extensively, and numerous hands find busy employment in the different mills; these, with their tall chimneys, exhibit an interesting contrast with the lofty Ochils and the surrounding plain. In 1876 the inhabitants adopted the Police and Improvement (1862) Act, and in 1880 the Burgh Gas Supply (1876) Act. Under the powers thus acquired, improvements of great importance have already been completed, and there is no doubt that the adoption of these Acts is a boon to the inhabitants. In the town is a branch of the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, and there is also a Savings Bank. The house of Alva, the residence of the Johnstone family, stands on an eminence, projecting from the base of Woodhill, about 220 feet above the bed of the Devon, which flows westward to join the Forth in the valley below, and 1,400 feet below the apex of the mountain. From the summit, which rises to an elevation of 1,770 feet above the sea level, the eye sweeps over an immense range of picturesque and interesting scenery, stretching all the way from the German Ocean on the east to the Campsie hills on the west, and includes among other attractive objects the Lammermoor chain, the Bass Rock, Edinburgh, Arthur's Seat, the Pentland hills, and the lovely and elastic winding of the Forth. Perhaps the most interesting object for an antiquarian in the whole parish of Alva would be the well of St. Serf, or Servanus, the tutelary saint of the district, which continues to pour out its bright and sweet waters in the minister's glebe at a little distance from the parish church. In 1874 public baths and washhouses were erected at the west end of the town, at a cost of about £1,000, the gift of the late Laird of Alva, James Johnstone, Esq., who also, about the same time, presented the inhabitants with a public park; and in 1873 a cemetery was provided by the Parochial Board, which has been tastefully laid out and arranged. The Town Hall, a plain structure, erected about 1840, by public subscription, and enlarged in 1871, will accommodate an audience of about 1,000 persons.

The places of worship are Established, Free and United Presbyterian churches. The parish church, of composite architecture, was first built in 1631, a stone in the west side of the church, with the date over a coat of arms, refers to the erection of the original structure. In 1815 it was wholly rebuilt, and in 1854 it underwent a considerable extension. A stone in the east side marks the date and gives the initials of the late James Johnstone, Esq., at whose expense the extension was carried out. In the belfry is an old bell which was stolen from its place and lost sight of for a number of years, but, through the exertions of the late Mr. Johnston, was ultimately recovered. The inscription upon the bell is somewhat illegible, but seems to be as follows:—"They who me giveth are David Johnkin, William Bell, to Alva Kirk; cur'd be that wretch who me perverteth from sacred use or else doth sell. Anno 1683." The parish is well provided with schools, and in addition to the Board schools there is one for infants, supported by Mrs. Johnstone, of Alva House. Alva parish is in the Presbytery of Stirling, and contains an area of 5,458 acres, and had in 1881 a population of 5,118, the burgh containing 4,961 of that number.

CLACKMANNAN,

WITH THE HAMLET OF KENNET.

CLACKMANNAN, the capital of the county and parish of that name, though not now entitled to that rank from either its size, population or commercial importance, was at one period a town of some consequence; but since the improvement of Alloo, and the superior facilities for commerce possessed by that place, it has sunk into comparative insignificance. The name is believed to be derived from the Gaelic word Clack, signifying the kirk town, and aman the name of the Lords of Annandale. It is 32 miles S.W. from Edinburgh, and 2 S.E. from Alloo, pleasantly situated on an eminence gently rising to an height of nearly 200 feet above the level of the Forth. The surrounding scenery is delightful, and is viewed to great advantage from Clackmannan Tower, which occupies a commanding site a little west of the town. Tradition states that this tower was built by King Robert Bruce, close to which he had his palace, not a vestige of which latter now remains. The tower is 80 feet high, and contains a variety of apartments, reached by means of a spiral staircase. The sword and helmet of the illustrious Bruce were formerly kept in the tower, but in 1796 they were bequeathed to the late Earl of Elgin by the widow of Henry Bruce, of Clackmannan, and are now preserved at Broomhall, Fifeshire. This venerable lady, who was a devoted adherent of the Stewarts, with the sword of King Robert in her hands, was wont to assume the privilege of conferring knighthood, and when Burns the bard visited her he was honoured in this way, the old lady observing that "she had a better right to make knights than some folks." She died at the advanced age of 95 years. In the centre of the town is a square tower, and a portion of the west gable of an old building, which was formerly the county court-house and goal. It was fast going to ruin, but in 1865 it was restored and furnished with a new clock having transparent dials, through the liberality of the late Francis Horne, Esq., and is now an ornament to the town. Close to the tower is the market cross, which, although a relic of bygone days, is in a good state of preservation. Mention may also be made of a whinstone, which is to be seen at the cross, upon which the king is represented to have frequently sat. To save this stone from spoliation of virtuosos, a number of gentlemen were at the expense of elevating it on the top of a stone pillar ten or twelve feet high. A public hall capable of accommodating about 450 persons was erected in 1883, at a cost of about £1,500. The principal trade of Clackmannan is that derived from the coal mines worked by the Clackmannan Coal Co., which find employment and humble competence to many of the industrious classes. A large woollen factory, employing about 200 hands, has been erected near the river Doon by Messrs. John Paton, Son & Co., of Alloa. Tunn and vat building is also carried on here, and at KILBAGIE, a short distance from the town, is a paper mill. The soil of the parish in the course, is considered the richest arable in the shire, and under the best state of cultivation. Kennet House, the residence of Lord Balfour of Burleigh, is a short distance east from Clackmannan, and is a fine modern mansion, occupying a beautiful and commanding site. There are two ports, one at Clackmannan and the other at KENNET-PANS, where coals are extensively shipped. Clackmannan is a station on the Stirling and Dunfermline branch of the North British railway, and a branch line is now (1892) being made to Kincairdine passing in close proximity to the town. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and one for United Presbyterians. The first mentioned, erected in 1814, at an expense of £4,500, is a spacious and handsome structure, equal to the accommodation of 1,200 persons. The parish of Clackmannan is in the Presbytery of Stirling. KENNET is a hamlet in the parish. Cattle fairs are held on June 26th and September 4th, if a Tuesday, if not, the Tuesday following, but of late years they have been very poorly attended. Acreeage, 9,427. Population of the parish in 1881, 4,518; of the town, 1,501.

DOLLAR.

WITH GLENDEVON AND MUCKART (PERTHSHIRE), AND THE VILLAGES OF POWMILL AND BLAIRINGONE (PARTLY IN KINROSS-SHIRE AND PERTHSHIRE).

DOLLAR is a parish and village, situate at the base of the Ochil hills, near their eastern extremity, on the road from Stirling to Kinross, 9 miles N. from Clackmannan, 7 N.E. from Alloa, 12 N.E. from Stirling, and 12 W.S.W. from Kinross. The climate is very mild and salubrious. A great proportion of the consequence this village now enjoys is to be ascribed to its Academy, which was erected and endowed by the munificent bequest of John Macnab, a native of the parish, who, though originally a herd boy, acquired, by industry and perseverance, a large fortune. He died in January, 1802. By his last will he directed that one half of that fortune (about £90,000) should be vested in the public funds, or some such security, in order that it might yield an annual income "for the endowment of a Charity or School for the Poor of the Parish of Dollar." The bequest was made to the ministers and elders of the parish, for the time being, as trustees. The sum thus bequeathed so far exceeded the requirements of the case that the trustees wisely laid the foundations of the institution on a broader basis. After a protracted litigation in Chancery, a very handsome edifice was erected in 1819, and masters appointed to give a classical and modern education. The Academy, designed by Playfair, and to which extensive additions have subsequently been made, is a large and handsome Grecian building with a portico, the pediment supported by six massive columns of the Doric order. In the centre of the building is a large hall, containing the library with upwards of 6,000 volumes. These books are lent to pupils and residents in Dollar free of charge. The number of pupils at the present time (1892) is about 500, &

considerable portion being boarders from various parts of the United Kingdom. Many pupils after completing their studies have risen to eminent positions in life. The scheme of education is regulated so as to prepare either for the universities, for commercial pursuits, or for civil engineering. The entire staff of the institution embraces the head master and 19 teachers. The constitution of the institution has recently undergone considerable alteration, under a scheme prepared under the Education Endowments (Scotland) Act, 1882. Primary education, hitherto provided for in the Academy, has devolved upon the School Board, who have erected a handsome school; while the institution has been reserved entirely for secondary education, the course of study in it commencing with Standard V. (Scottish Education Code). There are separate departments for boys and girls. Bursaries of various amounts are awarded annually by competitive examination. The Board of Governors consists of 11 representatives—viz., one elected by the minister and kirk session of the parish of Dollar; two by the Commissioners of Supply for the county of Clackmannan; one by the Commissioners of Supply for the county of Kinross; three by the School Board of Dollar; one by the Senatus of Edinburgh University; one by the Senatus of St. Andrew's University; one by the School Boards of Alloa burgh and Tillicoultry, alternately; and one by the School Boards of Clackmannan and Alva, alternately. The session commences in September and closes at the beginning of July. There are also two excellent private educational establishments in Dollar, for younger children, which prepare pupils for the course of instruction at the institution.

Dollar now boasts a goodly number of genteel houses and elegant villas, a respectable hotel, and numerous well-furnished shops. Cottages and villas are let for the summer season. It has also four handsome churches—Established, Free, Episcopal, and United Presbyterian. The parish church was erected in 1841, and is a neat edifice with a square tower rising from the main gable. There are also a commodious mission hall, a branch of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and extensive bleachworks, the property of William J. Haig, Esq. About a mile from the village is the venerable ruin of Castle Campbell, once one of the chief residences of the Argyll family, and which was taken in 1645 by the Marquis of Montrose. The remains occupy the summit of a high and almost insulated rock, and in the hill itself is a remarkable chasm, called "Kemp's Score," which still bears some marks of a stair. Originally called "Castle Gloom," the name was changed by Act of Parliament in 1469, to its present designation. The situation of these relics of former strength and grandeur is highly romantic and interesting, and will amply repay the tourist for turning aside to contemplate both the ruins and the scenery. The view from the top of the ruin is singularly beautiful and extensive. Though the castle stands upon an eminence, it is surrounded on all sides, except the south, by some of the loftiest of the Ochil hills, which rear their summits to a height of over 2,000 feet above the sea level. The name of John Knox, the Scottish reformer, is intimately associated with Castle Campbell, and a ruined archway, formerly one of the outworks of the castle, is popularly, though erroneously, known as "John Knox's pulpit." In 1864 application was made by the people of Dollar to Sir Andrew Orr, the proprietor of the estate, for permission to construct a new footpath, making access to the ruin more easy, and opening up some of the most wild and beautiful scenery imaginable. The desired permission was readily granted, and after an expenditure of £800, provided by subscription, in the month of May, 1865, the path was opened. It is fully a mile and a half in length, and embraces, besides the land scenery, a number of beautiful waterfalls. The attractions of the place have thus been greatly increased. Half-yearly fairs are held here on the second Monday in May and third Monday in October. The parish of Dollar, which has an area of 4,773 acres, is bounded on the north by Glendevon, on the east by Muckart and Fossoway, and on the west by Tillicoultry; in 1881 it contained a population of 2,500, and in 1891, 2,014.

MUCKART is a parish in Perthshire, 3 N.E. miles from Dollar, 11 N.E. from Alloa, and 18 S.E. from Crieff. It is triangular in shape, and length from east to west is about 5 miles, its greatest breadth from north to south about 2½ miles. The Devon forms its principal boundary, separating it from Fossoway on the south and east, while on the north and west two small streams separate it respectively from Glendevon and Dollar. A branch of the Ochil hills runs east and west along the northern boundary of the parish, terminating on the east by a conical-shaped hill called Sea-mat, 1,442 feet above sea level. The Devon in this neighbourhood displays a number of interesting waterfalls, amongst which are the falls of RUMBLING BRIDGE, DEVIL'S MILL, and CALDRON LINN. The water passes through fissures in the rocks, which in many places present the appearance of having been rent asunder. When viewed from the parapet of the Rumbling Bridge, 120 feet above the level of the river and over 500 feet above the sea level, the scenery beneath, on both sides, is such as not to be often met with, large numbers of visitors being drawn to the spot; and since the opening of the Devon Valley branch of the North British railway, for which there is a station, this locality has become much frequented. In 1645 every house in Muckart parish, including the church, was burnt by the Marquis of Montrose, when he sacked and destroyed Castle Campbell, at that time belonging to the Earl of Argyll. Besides the parish church, which is at Pool, a small village, there is a United Presbyterian church, one of the oldest in the denomination, and also in the centre of the parish a Board school. The soil of Muckart is in general light and gravelly, but in some parts it is more retentive. Rumbling Bridge is the nearest railway station. Acreage 4,923. Population in 1881, 601, and in 1891, 542.

GLENDDEVON is a parish in Perthshire, situated about six miles from Dollar, 14 from Alloa, and 15 from Crieff. It is pleasantly situated in a glen, the Ochil hills bounding it on the north and south. The Devon runs through the village, and in the neighbourhood there are some very beautiful falls; the river also abounds in trout, and in the season anglers have good sport. There is also a mill here for wool spinning. The Dunfermline and Inverkeithing waterworks are situated in this parish. The only antiquity is Glendevon Castle, now in a good state of preservation, and which was formerly an outpost of the Red Douglas family. The only church (the Established) is situated about a mile from the village. The nearest railway station is Rumbling Bridge, about 3½ miles distant. Fairs are held on first Wednesday in June, second Thursday in August, fourth Thursday in September, and third Thursday in November, chiefly for sheep and wool. Acreage 15,000. Population of the parish in 1881, 147, and in 1891, 119.

BLAIRINGONE and POWMILL are hamlets in the parish of Fossoway, which is partly in Kinross-shire and partly in Perthshire, distant about 2½ and 4 miles respectively from Dollar, their post town. Blairingone was erected a parish quoad sacra about the year 1855. The church is a plain stone edifice, built in 1836; the interior has since been refitted at considerable expense. It was chiefly owing to the liberality of the late Mr. Wylee, of Ardenan, that the parish was endowed, and at his death he bequeathed a further sum to increase the living. The parish has a School Board of its own, and there is a good public school situated near the church. The inhabitants are chiefly employed in agriculture. The nearest railway station is at Dollar.

CONVEYANCE BY RAILWAY,

ON THE DEVON VALLEY BRANCH OF THE NORTH BRITISH LINE.

Station, DOLLAR—James C. Young, station

 Station, RUMBLING BRIDGE—A. B. Cooper,

TILlicouLTRY,

WITH COALSNAUGHTON.

TILlicouLTRY, a parish and burgh, 4 miles N.E. of Alloa, 2
 E. of Alva, and 3 W. of Dollar, is pleasantly situated on the east side of the Ochil hills, and on the road from Stirling to Kierros—9 miles from the former and 15 from the latter town.
 The name of the parish is supposed to be derived from the Gaelic word Tillich-Cut Tic, signifying the hill at the back of the country.
 It is well supplied with excellent water from a stream that issues from the hills immediately behind the village. The river Devon, when not far from its source, and when flowing eastward, forms the northern boundary of the parish of Tillicoultry; and after pursuing a circuitous course of about 14 miles beyond the parish, again enters it running eastward, and cuts its arable plain into two nearly equal parts. The town is rapidly rising into a place of considerable importance from the woollen manufactures established here, and likewise at DEVONSIDE, chiefly for making shawls, fancy plaids, cloth tartans, tweeds, &c. In these branches the town and its neighbourhood furnish employment to a large number of the industrious class.
 The inhabitants adopted the Police and Improvement (1862) Act in 1871, and Tillicoultry is now governed by nine Commissioners, having a chief magistrate at its head. Branches of the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited, are established in the town. In 1878, the late James Archibald, Esq.
 presented to the Commissioners the sum of £1,500 for the erection of a tower and spire to the Popular Institute, which is situated on the north side of the town, to which have now been added an illuminated clock and bell. An orphanage was founded by the liberality of the late James Paton, Esq. who bequeathed £5,000 towards the endowment of such an institution. The building, which is situated at the north side of the town, was opened on the 21st March, 1879, and is capable of accommodating 30 inmates. The parish abounds with coal which is profitably worked. The Devon valley branch of the North British railway runs through the parish, and has a station about half-a-mile from the town. The scenery of the neighbourhood is as interesting as that of any part of this country. Beneath, the loftiest of the Ochils, rises directly to the north of the town, to the height of 2,300 feet above the level of the sea. The view from the summit of this mountain is very grand and extensive.

 The hills to the northward are said to contain various kinds of minerals, and about a century ago a copper mine here was wrought by a London company; the metal sold at £50 per ton, but from the thinness of the seams the works were abandoned as unprofitable.
 The principal antiquities are the ruins of a circular building on a steep and rugged basaltic eminence which rises to the north of the town, and the remains of a Druidical circle on the south end of a rising ground lying to the east of it, called Cuninghar. In 1862, two urns, each about 18 inches in diameter, and the same in height, containing human bones, were found in making excavations, about 150 yards from this circle. The places of worship are a church of the Establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, one belonging to a congregation of the Evangelical Union, and one for the Congregationalists, the latter erected in 1876, at a cost of about £3,000. The parish church is almost a square building, situated on rising ground at the east end of the town. It is in the Gothic style of architecture, the buttresses terminating in lofty and tastefully carved finials. Handsome Board schools were erected in the centre of the High street in 1875, at a cost of about £3,000. COALSNAUGH-TON is a small hamlet in the parish of and about a mile from Tillicoultry, where there are Board schools (erected in 1871), and a mission church. The parish of Tillicoultry is in the Presbytery of Dunblane, and embraces an area of 6,946 acres. In 1891 it had a population of 5,695, the burgh containing 3,393.

DUMBARTONSHIRE,

ANCIENTLY designated LENNOX, and subsequently Dun-bartonshire (which latter, though not the most popular, is the proper appellation), is a small county in the west of Scotland, and considered as within the boundary of the Highlands. On the east it is separated from Argyshire by Loch Long, Perthshire touches its northern extremity, the county of Stirling bounds it on the east and also on the north, Lanarkshire on the south-east, and the Clyde separates it from the county of Renfrew on the south. The figure of this county is rather singular; it describes almost a perfect crescent or semicircle, protruding on the south and south-west, its concavity being filled through its whole extent on the north and north-east by the county of Stirling. The distance between its eastern and northern extremities is nearly forty miles, while the breadth of the shire is from five to thirteen, and in one part it is only two miles broad; the parishes of Cumbernauld and Kir intilloch, however, are not included in this measurement, being detached from the main portion on the south-east, and lying between the counties of Lanark and Stirling. This severed portion of the county is twelve miles long by from two to four and a half broad, and was annexed to the district in the reign of Robert I. The entire shire embraces an area of 241 square miles, or 154,542 acres. In point of size this county stands as the twenty-seventh, and in population as the tenth.

NAME AND EARLY HISTORY.—In ancient times the name of the shire was Levanach, signifying “the county of Leven,” which was corrupted in the course of years to Levenax, and more latterly to Lennox. Originally this district was the residence of a British tribe designated the Attacotti or Eithacacti, a word importing “dwellers along the extremity of the wood.” The descendants of this people were not enslaved or expelled from their hunting grounds by the Romans; they became known as the Britons of Strath-Clyde, and, though almost perpetually at variance with their neighbours, they remained a distinct race till the reign of Malcolm IV. From these people the name of Dumbartonshire is said to be derived, and taken from the appellation of the castle, signifying “the hill of the Britons.” This region, until the early part of last century, continued to be the ready prey of certain lawless Highland clans, who lurked in the recesses of its interior, and were finally extirpated or reduced to quiescence and subordination only by the most vigorous measures that could be adopted by the civil government of the country. It was at one period the property of a powerful family of Saxon origin, one of whom, called Alwyn, the son of Arkil, was elevated to be Earl of Lennox in the reign of William the Lion, and his descendants for several centuries were at once heritable sheriffs of the county and chief possessors of its lands. The Earldom of Lennox was raised to a Dukedom in 1581; but Charles, the sixth Duke, dying without issue in 1672, the honours of the family, including the Earldom of Darnley, devolved upon Charles II., as nearest male heir, who bestowed them on his natural son, Charles Lennox, after whose demise the estates were sold.

PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—In recent times great improvements have been effected in this county, and every year its prolificacy and value are increasing in amount. The soil and climate having been found favourable to the growth of timber, the district now wears a warmer and more cheerful aspect than formerly, while the income accruing from produce has been in a corresponding degree augmented. The cattle of the shire are chiefly of the West Highland breed, some of which are reared in the county; the dairy has become an object of attention and profit on most farms. The roads throughout have been greatly extended and improved within the last sixty years, a measure highly conducive to the agricultural and manufacturing interests. A century has elapsed since the manufacturing dawn broke upon this part of Scotland—bleachfields about that period making their appearance on the banks of Loch Lomond and the Leven. About 1768 the first printworks were established on the Leven, but now calico printing and Turkey-red dyeing are very extensively pursued at several places. Ship building, both iron and wood, is a branch of some importance, as is also the manufacture of chemicals. Until 1831, the glass works of this county were in high repute, Dumbarton being their chief seat, but they have now ceased to exist. Dumbartonshire does not contain numerous mineral treasures within its bosom, but it has an abundance of freestone and slate, and some coal and ironstone, the two latter, though wrought, yielding but a small return. The soil is various, consisting in the north and west of mountain and moor, and south and east of Loch Lomond of deep black loam, clay, gravel and bog and peat. The climate generally is good, along the vale of the Leven and the Clyde it is mild, but on the Kilpatrick Braes and among the mountains of Arrochar and Luss the cold is rather severe, and stormy weather is experienced.

MOUNTAINS, LAKES, RAILWAYS, &c.—These are the most remarkable objects in the county. Of the former the chief are those of Arrochar, Luss, Row, and Roseneath, which are inaccessible to the plough, and abound with moors, mosses and woods; the hills of Kilpatrick, on the south, are of much less height, Ben Vorlich, adjoining Perthshire, having the greatest altitude, rising 3,300 feet above the level of the sea. The other principal elevations are Ben Vane, 3,004 feet; Ben Eich, 2,302 feet; Ben Breach, 2,233 feet; Ben Reoch, 2,168 feet; and Tullich, 2,075 feet. The precipitous and rugged summits of these mountains, constituting the Highland district, are frequently capped with snow, and in the finest weather hid amid the clouds; some of these eminences are apparently volcanic, particularly the rock on which Dumbarton Castle stands. There are about ten lakes or lochs, among which are Loch Long and Loch Gare, projecting into the Highland territory from the Firth of Clyde; but the most extensive, and, perhaps, the most beautiful lake in Scotland is that of Loch Lomond. It lies at the foot of the Grampian mountains, which terminate here, but seem to rise in many islands that appear a continuation of them, or like fragments torn off by some violent convulsion of nature. These islands, thirty-two in number, are lofty and picturesque. On Inch Calloch (or the island of Naas) are the remains of a conventual church, and on Inch Murrius (or the island of St. Murrius, two miles long, and converted into a deer park) are the ruins of a house once belonging to the Lennox family. This magnificent expanse of water is thirty miles long, in some places eight broad, and covers a surface 20,000 acres; the depth varies from twenty to one hundred fathoms. It abounds with delicious trout, and the southern part has salmon; the purity of the stream and the richness of its banks soothe the mind of the traveller, while the bleachfields, printworks and cotton mills, the villages, hamlets, and gentlemen's seats scattered over an apparently remote district, must impress him with an exalted idea of the industry and wealth of the inhabitants. The lake discharges its waters into the Clyde by the river Leven, which is the only stream of any note in the district. The Forth and Clyde Canal, about 35 miles in length, extends from Grangemouth on the Forth to Bowling on the Clyde. The North British Railway traverses the western division of the county, and the Edinburgh and Glasgow (North British) the eastern division, through which also runs a branch of the Caledonian line.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—Dumbartonshire is divided into 12 parishes, ten of which form the presbytery of Dumbarton; it contains but one royal burgh—Dumbarton—and four burghs of barony. The only contributory burgh, or that which in conjunction with others is represented in the Senate, belonging to the county is Dumbarton; it unites with Renfrew, Rutherglen, Kilmarnock, and Port Glasgow, styled the Kilmarnock Burghs, in returning one representative to the Imperial Parliament. The present member for the county is S. Williamson, Esq. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-92, was 11,789. The lord-lieutenant of the county is Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, Dumbartonshire. According to the census returns for 1881, the population of the shire was 75,833, and by those for 1891, 94,511. The valuation of the county for 1891-92 was, exclusive of churches, railways, and canals, £397,232; of churches (landward) £2,821; railways (landward), £70,551; total, exclusive of the burgh of Dumbarton, £470,103.

ALEXANDRIA,

BALLOCH, BONHILL, JAMESTOWN, KILMARONOCK, RENTON, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ALEXANDRIA is an increasing town, on the west side of the river Leven up to Bonhill. On the banks of this stream are several extensive print works. Its site is more commanding than that of Bonhill, and its situation both healthy and pleasant. The town consists of several well-built streets, and about a mile from it stands Tullichowan Castle, a noble edifice, the residence of James Campbell, Esq., from which an extensive view of the river, and of the vale through which it winds, is obtained. Between this seat and Alexandria is the great mansion of Brumley, which is also the property of the same gentleman, and two miles distant is Cameron House, the tasteful residence of Patrick B. Smollett, Esq. The places of worship here are one of the Establishment, a Free church, a United Presbyterian church, and a chapel each for the Wesleyan Methodists and Roman Catholics. There are two good Board schools—one in Main street, and the other known as the "North Public School," the latter an imposing structure, erected in 1884, and elegantly fitted up in the most modern style. The Ewing Gilmore Institute, consisting of library, reading and recreation rooms, is a splendid building, presented to the town by W. Ewing Gilmore, Esq. This handsome edifice, which is superbly furnished, cost about £12,000. A fine new building in connection with the Scottish Girls' Friendly Society was opened on the 21st May, 1891. This erection, which with the endowment cost upwards of £20,000, was built entirely at the expense of W. E. Gilmore, Esq. A neat public hall is centrally situated, at the bridge end; and there is also a fine drinking fountain in Main street, erected in 1870, in honour of the late Alexander Smollett, Esq., of Bonhill, by his friends and tenants. Population in 1881, 6,173, and in 1891, 8,255.

BONHILL is a thriving little town, in the parish of its name, 61 miles W. from Edinburgh, 18 N.W. from Glasgow, 3 N. from Dumbarton, and within one mile of the beautiful and celebrated Loch Lomond; situated on the east side of the Leven, and connected with Alexandria by a iron suspension bridge. Very considerable business is done here in card-printing, and it is altogether a prosperous little place. The town consists of one long and tolerably well-built street. About the centre of it, on the margin of the Leven, stands the parish church, a fine building of Gothic architecture, with a square tower, containing a clock. It was finished in 1836, at an expense of nearly £3,000, and contains about twelve hundred sittings. A Free church, erected in 1844, is an elegant building of red freestone, with a tapering spire; in 1885 it underwent restoration. It occupies a commanding site, a little to the south of the parish church. On a gentle eminence near the new bridge is a United Presbyterian church, erected in 1830. In 1836 a fine suspension bridge of iron was thrown over the Leven; the span is 478 feet, and its cost, with the approaches, £2,200, which was defrayed by Captain Smollett, of Bonhill. The inhabitants have previously made attempts to do away with the charge for crossing (one halfpenny), but have failed, but it is expected that the toll will cease in 1895. The land on both sides of the Leven is in a high state of cultivation, which together with respectable residences and recent improvements and erections, impart to this place an appearance highly prepossessing. A fair is held on the first Thursday in February for horses. Population of the town in 1881, 2,940, and in 1891, 3,881.

BALLOCH is situated at the south end of Loch Lomond, and about a mile north-west from Bonhill; it is the terminus of the North British Railway. In 1842, Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, erected an elegant suspension bridge across the Leven water, previous to which passengers were greatly inconvenienced by the ferry then in use. This bridge is twenty miles from Glasgow, by Renton and Dumbarton, but by avoiding the latter place and passing through Bonhill the distance is reduced to eighteen miles. The old bridge has been taken down, and is now superseded by a substantial iron girder bridge, supported from the bed of the river by iron pillars. It was re-opened for traffic in 1888, and a charge of one halfpenny is made for crossing. It is, however, expected that the toll, as at Bonhill, will cease in 1895. Balloch Hotel is situated at the foot of Loch Leven, and the Tullichowan Arms Hotel, immediately adjoins the station. A fair is held at Balloch on the Tuesday before the last Wednesday in April for cattle, and on the 15th of September for horses—the latter being the largest fair in Scotland. Population in 1881, 112.

KILMARONOCK is a small parish adjoining that of Bonhill, and is situated about 5 miles N.E. of that village. It contains nothing worthy of note but the parish church, an United Presbyterian church, and two Board schools. Acreage, 10,325. Population in 1881, 927, and in 1891, 900.

RENTON is a large village in the parish of Cardross, one mile S.W. from Bonhill, the like distance S. from Alexandria, and two N. from Dumbarton, most eligibly situated on the west bank of the Leven, which winds with much beauty below the village; on its banks are two extensive print works. A monumental column, bearing a Latin inscription, is here erected to the memory of the celebrated historian, Tobias Smollett, who was born here. It is a round pillar of stonework, sixty feet in height, springing from a square base. This memorial was erected by the descendants of that talented individual. The Victoria Institute, built in 1887, at a cost, including the library, of about £2,000, is a substantial structure, and was opened on Her Majesty's Jubilee day. It consists of a library of from 3,000 to 4,000 volumes, reading and recreation rooms, and also forms a first-class working men's club. Messrs. William Stirling & Sons, P. B. Smollett, Esq., and Messrs. Turnbull & Co. largely contributed towards its erection, the remainder being raised by public subscription. In the village are an Established church, three Free churches, and a Board school. A public hall, situated in Main street, was erected in 1882. In 1881 Renton had a population of 4,319, and in 1891, 5,293.

JAMESTOWN, with a population in 1891 of 2,116 inhabitants, is a modern village, a mile distant from Bonhill, on the road to Balloch. Extensive calico printing works are in operation here. There is a new church of the Establishment, and a Board school, and also a public hall and recreation rooms, presented to the village in 1884, by Sir Archibald Orr Ewing.

CUMBERNAULD,

CONDORRAT, DULLATUR, CASTLECARY, CROY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

CUMBERNAULD is an ancient village in the parish of its name, in a detached portion of the county, 83 miles w. from Edinburgh, 20 E. from Dumbarton, 14 N. E. from Glasgow, 13 S. from Stirling, 9 w. from Falkirk, 7 E. from Kirkintilloch, and 7 N. from Airdrie, situated on the main road between Glasgow and Edinburgh, through Falkirk, about two miles south of the Forth and Clyde canal, and the line of railway between Glasgow and Edinburgh. The weaving of checks and other striped fabrics by hand-loom for the Glasgow manufacturers is carried on here; but the staple business of the district is mining, there being several coal and lime works and many quarries of good freestone in the neighbourhood. The parish church is at the west end of the village, occupying a commanding site, and embosomed among trees; there is also a commodious Free church, erected in 1826. Cumbernauld possesses a good public library and subscription newsroom. The country around the village is well wooded, and agreeably varied with gentle eminences and rural dales. The principal mansion in the parish is Cumbernauld House. The annual fair is held on the second Thursday in May, for cattle, horses, &c. The parish of Cumbernauld has an area of 11,635 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 4,270, and in 1891, 4,279; of this number the village claimed 956.

CONDORRAT is a small village in the parish of and about 3 miles w. from Cumbernauld. The inhabitants are now chiefly employed in the coal and ironstone mines and quarries situated here, although some are still engaged in hand-loom weaving. Population in 1881, 715, and in 1891, 606.

CASTLECARY is a small hamlet situated about 2 miles N.E. of Cumbernauld, but in the county of Stirling. Croy is also a small village in the same county, and distant from Cumbernauld about 8 miles. There is a station at each of the above places on the North British railway.

DUMBARTON,

WITH CARDROSS, DALREOCH, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMBARTON, a royal burgh, the capital of the county, is 59 miles w. from Edinburgh, 15 n.w. from Glasgow, 8 s.e. from Helensburgh, and 8 s. from Alexandria, situated principally on a low piece of ground encompassed on its western quarter by the river Leven, about half a mile from its junction with the Clyde, and almost secluded from the view of persons on the latter river by the intervening castle of Dumbarton, which stands on a huge rocky eminence on the edge of the Frith, about half a mile from the town. The rock of Dumbarton measures a mile in circumference at its base, diminishing in breadth near the top, which is cleft into two summits, one higher than the other; these are almost perpendicular, and rise to a height of more than 900 feet. The fort was entered by a gate at the southern base of the rock, and here are situated the guardhouse and lodging for the officers, from whence the ascent is by some flights of steps to the part where the rock divides; here is a strong battery, barracks for the garrison, other necessary buildings, and two large tanks always filled with water; above these are several batteries which command a most extensive range, especially up and down the Clyde; its defences are kept in constant repair, and it is garrisoned by a limited body of military. The house of the governor is judiciously placed in the cleft of the rock, and erected in a style quite out of character with the picturesque outlines of the precipice. Some parts of the rock are magnetic. The rock of Dumbarton has been occupied by works of a warlike character throughout the successive dynasties of eighteen hundred years, and consequently is the most ancient stronghold in the country of which any record or tradition is preserved. In Bede's time it was deemed almost impregnable; but it was reduced by famine in 756, and taken by escalade in 1571; at other periods it has sustained sieges and assaults which our space will not permit us to detail. Dumbarton suffered severely from an inundation of the river Clyde and Leven some time prior to 1607, for in that year Parliament granted the inhabitants 37,000 merks Scottish for raising bulwarks to prevent a similar calamity. The burgh has greatly improved since 1856, when the Harbour and Police Acts were adopted. The present town is chiefly composed of one main street, lying in a semicircular form around the head or north end of the peninsula; there are some beautiful avenues flanked by detached houses, a charming public park, and an extensive suburb on the west side of the Leven leading to Renton, which place is connected with the royal burgh by a good stone bridge of five arches, reaching 300 feet in length. The water of the Leven forms a commodious harbour, and to promote the facility of trade an excellent quay and capacious public dock have been constructed by Messrs. Denny Brothers. A pier of pitch pine, the property of the Dumbarton corporation, and erected at a cost of £12,000, was opened in May, 1875. It extends 765 feet from the base of the castle rock, southwards, towards the channel of the river Clyde; the gangway is 640 feet in length and 15 feet broad, and the pier head is 90 feet long and 25 feet wide. The depth of the river at the extremity of the pier head is ten feet at low water, so that steamers are able to touch at the pier at all states of the tide. The gas works are in the hands of the corporation. There is a plentiful supply of water from the Long Craigs, and the drainage of the town is being rapidly perfected. Dumbarton was long famed for the manufacture of crown glass, but that branch was finally extinguished in 1818. The discontinuance of this source of industry proved a serious drawback upon the prosperity of the town, for when these works were in active operation they furnished labour to three hundred workmen, and annually consumed 16,000 tons of coal, besides employing a large tonnage of shipping, and paid from £40,000 to £50,000 excise duties per annum; the property is now in other hands, and the engineering establishment of Messrs. Denny Brothers occupies a portion of the premises. The principal trade, and on which the prosperity of the town now chiefly depends, is that of shipbuilding, which is carried on here extensively and with great spirit, and at which in ordinary times about three thousand men are employed. There are three extensive yards. Brewing, tanning, iron-undoing, and sail and rope making are also carried on to a limited extent. In High street are branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, and the Union Bank of Scotland, Limited. The British Linen Company have a branch in Stratheleven place. Dumbarton was erected into a royal burgh by Alexander II. in the year 1221, and its privileges (including the right of fishing in the Leven), were confirmed by a charter of James VI. The municipal government is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer and nine councillors. The sheriff ordinary court and the commissary court are held every Tuesday and Friday during session, and the sheriff small debt court every Tuesday during the session, and on vacation court days. Quarter sessions are held on the first Tuesday in March, May and August, and last Tuesday in October. The burgh unites with Kilmarnock, Renfrew, Rutherglen and Port Glasgow in returning one member to parliament. Kilmarnock is the returning burgh. The original County and Burgh buildings were completed in 1825, at an expense exceeding £5,000; the accommodation being found inadequate, in 1863 the interior was entirely reconstructed, and two spacious wings also added, at a cost of £5,170. They form a noble structure, and contain convenient court rooms, with every suitable office; the gaol is placed at the rear of the court house, but is not now used, the prisoners being sent on to Glasgow. A combination poor house was completed in 1865, at a cost of about £7,000, increased accommodation being supplied from time to time. It is situated on the outskirts of the town, in a healthy and pleasant locality.

At the east end of High street stands the parish church, a handsome edifice, with a fine spire and clock; the erection was completed in 1811 at a cost of £6,000. A district parish church has been erected at the east end of the town, called Knoxian church; it is a fine edifice, in the Gothic style, and cost about £4,500. The other places of worship are two Free churches, two United Presbyterian churches, an Episcopal church—a splendid stone edifice, erected in 1873, at the east end of High street and Church place—and an Established church at Dalreoch, a neat new stone building. A mission hall has been erected at a cost of £1,500, situated in Church street; there are also Wesleyan Methodist, Evangelical Union, Baptist and Roman Catholic chapels. All the remains of the ancient collegiate church, founded in 1450, by Isabella, Duchess of Albany and Countess of Lennox, and dedicated to St. Mary, is one of the tower arches, which has been removed and placed at the entrance of the late Burgh school, in Church street, the land being required for the formation of the Dumbartonshire railway, which passes over the site of this once extensive pile. The principal educational establishment is the Burgh Academy, a truly eminent institution of long standing. The late building proving insufficient for the growing requirements of the town, a much larger erection was provided through the liberality of the council and inhabitants. The style is French Gothic of the thirteenth century the building presenting a frontage of 132 ft. adorned by a beautifully ornamented central tower, 140 ft. high. Above the Academy are the rooms pertaining to the Dumbarton School of Art, inaugurated November 25th, 1884, and in the rear of it is a large public hall, embracing every convenience, and capable of accommodating an audience of about 750. The interior of the school building was entirely destroyed by fire in 1882, but has since been rebuilt and furnished with all the newest scholastic appliances. The expense of erection of both buildings was about £6,000. There are also three Board schools, erected at considerable expense; a Roman Catholic school, and a stone building, situated in Risk street, formerly used as an Episcopal school; the cost, including the grounds, was £5,000, which was defrayed by Richard D. Buchanan, Esq. of Auchentorlie, Bowling. The Denny Institute, a magnificent stone building situate in Church street, was opened on the 26th January 1892; the cost was upwards of £7,000, which was raised by public subscription. It was built to perpetuate the memory of William Denny Esq. who died at Buenos Ayres, 17th March, 1887. There are three weekly newspapers established here—the Dumbarton Herald, the Lennox Herald, and the Dumbarton Observer. There is a free circulating library and reading room in the Denny Institute. A public park, called Levensgrove Park, and covering about 35 acres, has been presented to the town by Peter Denny, Esq., of Helenslee, and John Macmillan, Esq., of College Park. It is pleasantly situated, and bounded by the Clyde and Leven, the grounds being tastefully laid out. The cost was about £20,000, and it was opened May 30th, 1885. A cattle market is held on Wednesday, which is well attended; there is also a large cattle fair held on Carman Moor on the first Wednesday in June. Population of Dumbarton in 1881, 14,172, and in 1891, 16,908.

CARDROSS is a small but beautiful village in the parish of its name situated 4 miles W. from Dumbarton, on the road to, and about 4½ miles S.E. from, Helensburgh, and near the shore of the Clyde. Prior to the Reformation the church of Cardross was a rectory, belonging to the Cathedral of Glasgow, and was seated on a peninsula promontory skirted by the Leven and the Clyde. The present church, which stands in the village, is a neat edifice with a square tower.

This district is very pleasant and salubrious, and the situation of the parish eligible for business. The vicinage of the village is the residence of many families of good position, whose tasteful mansions embellish the surrounding scenery. The parochial school and likewise the Free church are handsome stone buildings. The North British Railway Co. have a station here. On Castle Hill, near Dumbarton, is the site of the residence of Robert Bruce, from whence he could behold his army encamped below. Population of the parish in 1881, 9,365, and in 1891, 10,550.

HELENSBURGH WITH ROW,

CLYNDER, GARELOCHHEAD, RAHANE, ROSENEATH, GLENFRUIN, SHANDON, COVE, KILCREGGAN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

HELENSBURGH is a modern town, burgh of barony and seaport in the parish of Row, 22 miles W.N.W. from Glasgow, 9 s. from Luss, and 8 N.W. from Dumbarton; lying on the Firth of Clyde, opposite to Greenock, from which place it is 5 miles distant. The town, which is a perpetual feu from Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss, was commenced in 1777, and since that period it has risen into notice as the most convenient and agreeable watering place on the Clyde; it now consists of a series of handsome houses and streets, laid out on a neat and improved plan. The accommodation for visitors is equal to that of most watering places; numerous private houses are well furnished for the reception of families or individuals resorting hither in the summer. There is a superior and convenient hotel, called the Imperial, opposite the old pier, and another some distance east of the town, called the Queen's, which has been licensed since the beginning of the century. A public library, circulating libraries, and reading rooms are also in the town. The quay, erected in 1817, and in 1872 greatly enlarged, extends from the centre of the town a considerable distance into the river. The North British Railway Company in 1882 erected a new station and pier at Craigendorn, about a mile and a half eastward of the town; steamers run in connection with the trains for the west coast. Helensburgh was elevated to the rank of a burgh of barony in 1802; its municipal government is vested in 12 police commissioners, being three for each of the four wards into which the town is divided. A Police Court is held each Monday, and at other times when required.

Helensburgh was created a quoad sacra parish in 1862, the west quoad sacra parish being constituted in 1872. The places of worship are—two of the Establishment, an Episcopal, a United Presbyterian, and two Free churches; also chapels for Congregationalists, Baptists and Roman Catholics. There are three Board schools, one of which, the Hermitage, is a fine structure; there are also several respectable boarding academies in the town. At a distance of two miles, in a westerly direction, is Roseneath Castle, a seat of his Grace the Duke of Argyll; this noble edifice stands on the opposite side of Loch Gare, and is well worth the stranger's notice. Opposite Roseneath, on the north-west bank of the loch, is situated Ardencaple Castle, the birthplace of the present Duke of Argyll. A portion of the castle is of ancient date, but the greater part is comparatively of modern erection. It commands a good view of the Clyde and the Gare Loch, which flows between these splendid mansions, to a distance of seven miles into the mainland; and in the vicinity of the town, near the banks of the Clyde, are several elegant seats and residences. The following public buildings are worthy of note: The Municipal Buildings, in East Princes street, is a handsome modern edifice, embracing court hall, council chamber, and general public offices, with police station and cells in the rear; the Victoria Hall, Sinclair street, built by subscription at a cost of £6,000, is used for concerts, public meetings, &c.; the hospital in King street, erected at a cost of £3,000, contains under one roof a hospital for infectious diseases and one for non-infectious cases, each having a separate entrance and distinct airing grounds. The Bank of Scotland, situated in West Clyde street, is a fine stone building in the baronial style of architecture, erected at a cost of £3,000; the Union Bank, Limited, in Colquhoun square, and the Clydesdale Bank, Limited, in James street, are also both substantial stone structures. A new park, opened to the public through the liberality of William Kidston, Esq., and the late Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., is situated at the foot of the Gare Loch, and commands an excellent view of Roseneath Castle and the surrounding scenery. In the neighbourhood of Helensburgh resided for twenty-five years the celebrated Henry Bell, to whose fertile and persevering genius Europe is indebted for the first successful application of steam to the propelling of vessels. The first trip ever made by steamboat in this division of the globe was from Port Glasgow to Helensburgh by the Comet, in the year 1812. Mr. Bell was a millwright and engineer; he was born in the parish of Torphichen, county of Linlithgow, April 7th, 1767, died at his house (now the Queen's Hotel), in Helensburgh, November 14th, 1830, and was interred in the parish churchyard of Row, where has been erected a memorial commemorative of the inestimable benefits conferred by him upon his species, by rendering subservient to the use of man that stupendous power which now successfully "combats the fickle wind and stems the flowing tide;" there is also a handsome obelisk on the esplanade, which has been erected to his memory. In 1881 Helensburgh had a population of 7,693, and 1891, 8,405; this number is, however, greatly increased by visitors during the summer months.

Row is a small romantic village in the parish of its name, situated on the eastern margin of the Gare Loch, about 2 miles W. from Helensburgh. The parish of Row is chiefly of a hilly and pastoral character, and the low grounds are fertile and beautiful. The parish church stands in the village, near the ferry across the Gare Loch to the peninsula of Roseneath; opposite it is a point projecting into the loch, and it is supposed that from this circumstance the name of the parish is derived—the word Rhu signifying a point. The parish, exclusive of a narrow strip on Loch Long, is about six miles in length by four in breadth, bounded by Luss on the east, Helensburgh on the south-east, on the west by Gare Loch, and its south end is washed by the Firth of Clyde. Acreage, 20,126; Population of the parish in 1881, 9,972, and in 1891, 11,172.

SHANDON, about 3 miles N. of Row, is a district containing some fine villas and mansions, a large hydropathic establishment, much frequented during the summer months, and a sea-side home for city children, the gift of Sir Archibald Orr Ewing. Here is a Free church. A little to the north of Shandon is FASLANE, where are the ruins of an old chapel, surrounded by the remains of an ancient churchyard.

GARELOCH VILLAGE, about 6 miles beyond Row, is prettily situated at the head of a loch, a screen of hills rising behind separating the Garelochhead from Loch Long. The interesting and beautiful GLENFRUIN is approached from here. This romantic place is studded with many seats of the gentry, who make this neighbourhood their favourite resort from June to September. Facing the pier, where the pleasure steamers arrive and depart, stands the Garelochhead Hotel, where every comfort and accommodation can be obtained. About a mile and a half on the road to Arrochar, on an eminence called "Whistlefield," splendid views may be had of Lochs Gail and Long and the Gare Loch. Population in 1881, 460, and in 1891, 794.

ROSENEATH is a parish of 8,461 acres occupying the peninsula of that name, extending for about 7 miles from east to west, and from one to four broad. The parish church, a small but neat modern edifice, is within a quarter of a mile of the ferry and pier, and the parochial school is adjacent. There is also a Free church in the neighbourhood, and a United Presbyterian church at CLYNDER, which latter place and RAHANE are districts in this parish, the former 1 mile and the latter 3 miles N. from Roseneath village. Roseneath Castle, already noticed, is the principal object of interest. Population of the parish in 1881, 1,994 and in 1891, 2,064.

About 2 miles over the hills is the burgh and village of KILCREGGAN, and a mile further west, at the entrance to Loch Long, is the kindred village of COVE. Both are resorted to for sea bathing, and consist of a series of villas and mansions extending for some miles along the shore; at each is a pier for the convenience of passing steamers. The places of worship are an Established church, a chapel of ease, and a United Presbyterian church. Population of Kilcreggan and Cove in 1881, 816, and in 1891, 1,164.

KILPATRICK,

BOWLING, LITTLE MILL, MILTON, DUMBUCK, DUNGLASS, DUNTOCHER, HARDGATE, FAIFLEY, DALMUIR, CLYDEBANK
 KILBOWIE, YOKER, RADNOR PARK, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KILPATRICK (OLD, or WEST) is a post village, in the parish of its name, 53 miles w. from Edinburgh, 10 n.w. from Glasgow, and 5 E.S.E. from Dumbarton, situated on the road between the two latter-named towns, and occupying a pleasant site at the foot of a hilly country, in view of the Clyde. The name Kilpatrick signifies the "Church of Patrick," but in this case tradition varies from fact, one authority stating it to be the "cell," while another proves the definition just given to be proper, for Patrick never was an anchorite. It is generally supposed, however, that this parish was the birthplace of the celebrated titular saint of Ireland. The traditional record asserts that, at the age of sixteen, this individual was carried off from this then civilised Roman district by a band of Irish marauders, who made a descent upon this part of the coast, and with other captives subjected to slavery in their own comparatively barbarous country; but the "Ecclesia Hibernica" distinctly states that he voluntarily landed on the northern shore of Ireland in the year 461, after a residence of twenty-six years in the Roman capital. The visit strengthened the connection that had priorly existed between the two nations. Within its limited locality the place has not the advantage of any manufactory. At the entrance of the village from Dumbarton stands the parish church, a neat stone edifice, surmounted by a square tower and clock, erected in 1812. At the east end of the village are a Free church and a United Presbyterian church, and there is also a Board school at Gavinburn. Population of the parish in 1881, 8,885, which in 1891 had increased to 17,715, the village having 1,313 of that number.

BOWLING is a small village about three quarters of a mile west from Kilpatrick, with a station on the North British railway, and a landing stage for passengers and goods on the Clyde. At Bowling Bay commences the Forth and Clyde canal (now owned by the Caledonian Railway Co.), which, after traversing 35 miles in an eastern direction, empties itself into the Forth at Grangemouth, thus connecting the German Ocean with the Western Channel. This great work was begun in 1768, and opened throughout on the 28th July, 1790. Vessels drawing eight feet of water, having a nineteen feet beam, and a seventy-three feet keel, can navigate this noble junction. An outer basin is constructed for the discharge and shipment of cargoes for transit by the canal or rail, and vessels drawing nineteen feet of water can enter this basin. The Trustees of the Clyde Navigation have also a harbour here, for the accommodation of vessels laid up during the winter, or otherwise for sale. In the village is a Free church, erected in 1869; there is also the Buchanan Institute, comprising library, reading and recreation rooms. This neat building, which has cost about £1,000, was opened December 13th, 1884, being the gift of Andrew Buchanan, Esq., Auchentorlie.

AT LITTLE MILL is a distillery and ship-building yard. At DUNGLASS, half a mile west of Little Mill, are to be seen the ruins of an old fortification, or a Roman boundary, and in the castle grounds a stone memorial pillar of Henry Bell, the eminent engineer, who ran the first steamboat on the Clyde in 1813.

MILTON and DUMBUCK are on the road to Dumbarton; at the former place is a paper mill and a Board school, also Milton House, the residence of Henry M. Napier, Esq., which is pleasantly situated on a declivity, commanding an extensive and beautiful view of the Clyde. Population of Bowling, Little Mill and Dunglass in 1891, 829, and of Dumbuck and Milton, 640.

DUNTOCHER is a considerable village, situated two miles north from Kilpatrick. The principal part of the town is lighted with gas. The Established church was erected in 1886, at an expense of £1,700. The other places of worship are a Free church at Hardgate, an

United Presbyterian church, and a Roman Catholic chapel; there is also a Board school—a handsome stone building—and a Roman Catholic school. Perhaps the most ancient bridge in Scotland exists here; a stone near to it bears the following inscription:—

"PONTIEM HUNC EXIT.
 RUL. CURAVIT. IMP. T.
 EL. ANTONIN. HADR.
 AUG. P. P. QUINT. LOLL.
 URBIC. LEG. FERRE. COL.
 LAPSUM. RESTITUIT.
 DOMINUS DE BLANT-
 IRE. A. FER. CHR.
 M. D. CC. LXXII."

which is thus translated:—"This bridge was built under the auspices of the Emperor Titus Elius Antonianus Augustus Augustus, father of his country, by Quintus Lollius Urbicus, his lieutenant; being almost ruinous, it was restored by Lord Blantyre in the year 1772." A little above the bridge there was a fort and watch tower, visible when Pennant visited this quarter in 1772, but no vestige of them now remains. The water works at Cochra, constructed in 1874, supply Duntocher, Dalmuir and Clydebank, the area of the water district being 2,560 acres. HARDGATE is about a quarter of a mile east from Duntocher, and FAIFLEY about the same distance north thereof. Population in 1881, 1,594 and in 1891, including Hardgate and Faifley, 3,354.

DALMUIR is a village about one mile and a half from Duntocher. Here are several genteel residences, pleasantly situated on elevated sites, commanding fine views of the Clyde and the surrounding country. There are also engineering and calico printing works here. Population in 1891, 2,047.

RADNOR PARK is a new village, equidistant from Dalmuir and Kilbowie stations, being about three quarters of a mile from either. Population in 1891 with Dalmuir Hill, 1,581.

CLYDEBANK, a rapidly increasing district, was erected into a burgh on the 21st December, 1886. It includes Dalmuir, Kilbowie, and Yoker, the population in 1891, being 9,998, of this number 2,535 belonged to Clydebank. The municipal government is vested in a Provost, two bailies, and nine commissioners, James R. Thomson, Esq., being elected first provost. A branch line of railway from Clydebank to Partick was opened in December, 1882, and continued on to Yonkhill, February, 1885; at Stobcross junction this line joins the underground railway for Glasgow (Queen street). The large ship building yard and engineering works of Messrs. J. & G. Thomson, Limited, are situated here, covering thirty acres of land, and giving employment to 4,000 men.

At Kilbowie are the extensive works of the Singer Manufacturing Company, which cover 46 acres of ground, and employ about 8,000 persons. The places of worship are the Established church, Hamilton Free church, erected in 1884, the Clydebank Union church, built in 1887, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Wesleyan chapel, erected in 1886. Kilbowie possesses the largest and most handsome Board school in Scotland, it being able to accommodate 2,600 scholars. A public hall, affording accommodation for an assembly of 1,000 people, was opened in September, 1884, attached to which is a public library and reading room. The population of Kilbowie in 1881 was 1,693, and in 1891, 3,593.

YOKER is a village about 4 miles S.E. from Old Kilpatrick, and 6 n.w. from Glasgow, the eastern portion of the village being in the county and burgh of Renfrew. Here are a distillery and Board school. Population in 1891, 1,823

KIRKINTILLOCH,

LENZIE, WATERSIDE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

KIRKINTILLOCH (formerly Kirkintulloch) is an ancient and thriving manufacturing town, burgh of barony, and capital of the parish of its name, situated in a detached portion of the county, 40 miles w. from Edinburgh, 20 s.w. from Stirling, 16 s. from Dumbarton, the like distance w. from Falkirk, 7 n. from Glasgow, the same distance w. from Cumbernauld, 5 s.w. from Kilsyth, 4 s.e. from Campsie, and 5 s.e. from Campsie Glen. It is situated on the water of Luggie, near to its junction with the Kelvin, and is understood to derive its name from the locality, the original designation being Cairpintulloch, signifying in Cambr-British the fort on the head or end of the hill, which is descriptive of the site of the town, standing as it does on the verge of a ridge, advancing from the south into a plain on the banks of the Kelvin. The wall of Antoninus passed through this town, and one of his principal forts stood on the summit of a hill, a little west of the parish church; the site of a fortress called "Peel" is even to this day recognised by a deep moat. A handsome monument of red Aberdeen granite was, by public subscription, erected on the bank of the Luggie, near the bridge, to commemorate the heroic endeavours of a young gentleman named Hazleton Robson, of Glasgow, to save a child's life who had fallen into the river, but who, however, failed in the attempt and lost his own life. The monument bears a suitable inscription. About a mile to the east of the town, on the Inchbilly road, is the martyrs' stone, commemorating John Wharry and James Smith, who were captured at Stevenson Wood, Inchbilly, and taken to Glasgow, where they were first tortured, then executed, and afterwards carted out to Inchbilly wood, where they were shot out coffins into the moss and barid. The inscription states that they suffered at Glasgow for their adherence to the Word of God and Scotland's covenanted work of reformation. Kirkintilloch (which is the largest parish in the shire) and the neighbouring parish of Cumbernauld are separated from the rest of the county by the north point of Lanarkshire, and are surrounded by that county and Stirlingshire. The weaving of lappet muslin is carried on here, but not to so great an extent as formerly, the inhabitants being now chiefly employed at the different chemical and iron works on the canal bank. There are also coal and iron-tore mines in the neighbourhood. The monetary transactions of the burgh are facilitated by branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the National Bank of Scotland, Limited, and the Savings Bank of Kirkintilloch. Few places possess more eligible advantages for inland conveyance than this; that great undertaking, the Forth and Clyde canal, passing through the town affords a speedy and certain transit to the east or west coast of Scotland. The Monkland and Kirkintilloch Railway, which extends to Airdrie, joining the Ballochney Railway about a mile from that town, has its terminus here; this line also joins the Garthkirk and Glasgow railway. The Edinburgh and Glasgow line passes over the Monkland and Kirkintilloch, a mile south of the town, and near this is LENZIE JUNCTION station. Kirkintilloch is a free burgh of barony, its first charter having been conferred by William the Lion, dated at Forres; it was granted to William Cummin, of Cumbernauld and Kirkintilloch, and was subsequently confirmed and its privileges enlarged. The town was formerly governed by a senior and a junior magistrate, otherwise bailies, ten councillors, treasurer, and town clerk, but in 1871 the inhabitants adopted the General Police and Improvement (Scotland) Act, 1862, and their affairs are now administered by a body of 12 police commissioners. Gas works were erected by a private company for lighting the place, but were acquired by the town under the Burgh Gas Supply Act, 1876. The Court House and Gaol, which form a substantial building at the cross, is ornamented with a tower and spire, containing a clock with four dials. Burgh police courts are held fortnightly, or more frequently if occasion requires. The magistrates act also as dean of guild, in the erection of new buildings, &c.; justice of peace courts are held only as may be required, and the sheriff's small debt circuit court on the first Thursday in March, June, September, and December. The parish church which was built in 1644, and is in the form of a cross, stands near the centre of the town. The other places of worship in Kirkintilloch comprise the quoad sacra parish church of St. David's, two Free churches, one United Presbyterian, an Original Secession church, a Methodist, a Baptist, and a Roman Catholic chapel.

In LENZIE there are an Established church, a Union (Free and U.P.) and the Episcopal church. Fairs are held on the second Tuesday in May, and October 20th for cattle and horses. The following public institutions in the neighbourhood are worthy of special notice, viz:—The Barony Parish Lunatic Asylum, at Woodilee, Lenzie, in connection with the Barony Parish, Glasgow, was opened on 22nd October, 1875. The style of the extensive buildings is Elizabethan, the architects being Messrs. James Salmon and Son. The whole range is over 700 feet long and 450 feet broad, occupying about 6½ acres of ground. The cost was £150,000. The estate altogether extends to 382 acres, costing over £80,000, making a total of £180,000, and was bought by the Barony Parochial Board, in 1852, at the price of £56 per acre. The principal external features of the Asylum are two massive and handsome towers, each rising to the height of 150 feet from the centre of the building, and a very elegant fleche which surmounts the chapel, which is seated for 400 persons. Its principal window is fitted with three divisions of stained glass, representing Faith, Hope, and Charity, the work of Mr. Ballantine, of Edinburgh. The dining hall is also a very commodious apartment. In it 500 persons can be supplied at one sitting. The recreation hall, on the second flat of the building, is a room about 90 feet long by 60 feet at the broadest part, and is fitted with a spacious platform for musical and dramatic entertainments. There are in all 110 single rooms, and dormitory accommodation for 500 other patients. The administrative department is so arranged that it can be easily extended so as to provide for 800 or 1,000 patients. Very extensive additions are now (1892) being made to the main building. At Westermains is also a private asylum, of which Mr. Jas. Lawrie is proprietor, possessing every necessary requisite for those mentally afflicted. The Glasgow Convalescent Home is situated at Lenzie, about half-a-mile to the south-east of the Railway station, and is capable of containing 62 patients. The Glasgow Royal and Western Infirmarys and the subscribers to the Home have the privilege of recommending the general public as patients. The Broomhill Home, for the relief of incurables for Glasgow and the West of Scotland, is situated at Kirkintilloch, and spends for the aid of such persons in their own homes £100 a month. The boundaries of the Burgh were a few years ago extended to include the eligible building ground in close proximity. The entire parish of Kirkintilloch comprises an area of 7,146 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 10,591, and in 1891, 12,426; the town having of this number 9,313.

LUSS,

ARROCHAR, TARBET (LOCH LOMOND), INVERARAN, INVERSNAD, HOWARDENNAN, ARDLUI, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

LUSS is a small romantic village, in the parish of its name, 69 miles N.W. from Edinburgh, 23 N.W. from Glasgow, 13 N.W. from Dumbarton, 10 N.W. from Bonhill, and 9 N.E. from Helensburgh; most delightfully situated on the western margin of the justly-famed Loch Lomond. The only business of consequence is the Camstradden and Luss slate quarries, from which considerable quantities of blue slate are obtained, and conveyed to distant parts of the country by means of small sailing vessels on Loch Lomond to Balloch, and thence by rail. If healthiness of situation and beauty of scenery be desirable, few places possess equal advantages with Luss; but that which renders it a place of paramount interest is the noble loch, on the margin of whose pellucid waters it reposes, surrounded by some of the most inviting and delightful scenery in Scotland. In summer, the numerous pleasure parties crowding here impart a gaiety of appearance to the lake, which, if possible heighten the interest of this charming spot. Steamboats sail every day (Sunday excepted), from the south end of the loch, calling at Balmaia, Luss, Tarbet, Rowardennan for Ben Lomond, Inversnaid, &c., returning the same afternoon. Here resided the learned Dr. Stuart, who translated the Bible into the Gaelic language; and on the opposite side of the loch, near Orymen, lived for a considerable time Lord Napier, the inventor of logarithms. A fine view of Loch Lomond, with its numerous islands, is obtained from Strone hill, a considerable elevation about half a mile north of the inn. About 2½ miles S. of Luss is Rosdhu House, the seat of Sir James Colquhoun, Bart., of Luss. It is a beautiful building, with a fine portico, seated on a low point of land, surrounded on three sides by Loch Lomond. The church was dedicated to Saint Mackessog, a native of Lennox, who was a bishop and confessor, and suffered martyrdom about the year 520, at a place below Luss, on the side of the lake, where a large cairn of stone was raised to his memory. He was buried in the parish church, and was long regarded as the tutelary saint of this part of the country. The places of worship here are one of the Establishment and a Free church. There is a Board school at Luss, and a parochial school at Muirland. A fair is held here on the third Tuesday in August. Acreage, 24,206. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 719, and in 1891, 633.

ARROCHAR (more properly Arrochar) is a parish lying between

Loch Lomond and Loch Long, bounded on the south by Luss. It extends nearly 16 miles in length by three in breadth. The village, which is situated at the head of Loch Long, is 10 miles S. from Luss, and about 1½ W. from Tarbet. In the parish is the celebrated Loch Sloy, much resorted to by tourists. The established church is a neat structure. Acreage, 25,858. Population in 1881, 517, and in 1891, 580.

TARBET is a much-famed hotel and small village on Loch Lomond about 8 miles S. from Luss, and, to distinguish it from Tarbet on Loch Fyne, in Argyshire, is generally designated Tarbet on Loch Lomond. This place, which is much visited by tourists, is considered the most pleasing and romantic spot on Loch Lomond, and Ben Arthur, or the "cobber," is best seen near to the hotel, and Ben Lomond in front of it. The distance between Loch Lomond and Loch Long is here about a mile and a half, and the arrangements for conveyance in summer are such that a person may leave Glasgow, proceed by rail to Balloch, embark in the Loch Lomond steamer, and sail to Tarbet, walk or ride across the isthmus to Arrochar, where a steamer is ready to start again for Glasgow, down Loch Long, and up the Clyde. ARDLUI is the terminus of the Loch Lomond steamers. The Rowardennan and Inversnaid Hotels are on the opposite side of the loch. Passengers alight at Rowardennan pier for Ben Lomond. There is a Free church and a Board school in the village.

NEW KILPATRICK, OR BEARSDEN,

CANNIESBURN, GARSADDEN, MILNGAVIE, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

NEW (or East) KILPATRICK is a parish formerly partly in this county and partly in that of Stirlingshire, but in 1891 was wholly included in the county of Dumbarton. Its extent is upwards of 6 miles from north to south, by a breadth of from 2 to 4 miles, and contains 12,050 acres. A branch line of railway traverses the parish, leaving the main line at Mayhill, and terminating at Milngavie, the station for New Kilpatrick being called Bearssden, and as the place is generally known by that name, letters should be addressed accordingly. The merchants and others engaged in commerce in Glasgow possess many handsome residences here, occupying elevated sites and commanding extensive views of the surrounding country. The Forth and Clyde canal intersects it in its northern part, entering the district on crossing the Kelvin, by a stupendous aqueduct. The district was separated from Old Kilpatrick, which bounds the parish on the west, in the year 1649. The church is 6 miles N.W. from Glasgow, and is a neat building erected in 1807. The Reformatory for Girls at East Chapelton is a fine stone building, erected in 1882. St. Peter's Roman Catholic College (for advanced students) was opened in March, 1892. It is a magnificent stone building, and was the gift of the Archbishop of Glasgow to his diocese. The building alone cost upwards of £30,000. The Buchanan Retreat, completed in 1891, is also an imposing structure. This building is the gift of the Misses Buchanan, of Bellfield House, Kilmaronock, for the reception of aged men (under certain conditions) bearing the name of Buchanan. The cost was about £30,000.

Garscube House, the residence of Lady Campbell, is the principal seat in the neighbourhood; it is pleasantly situated on the west side of the Kelvin. CANNIESBURN is about a quarter of a mile S. from Bearssden station. GARSADDEN is a district about 2 miles N.W. from New Kilpatrick. Here is a Board school. Garscadden House, the residence of John Kerr, Esq., LL.D., is a fine old manorial structure, situated in a well-wooded park. Population of New Kilpatrick parish in 1881, 7,414, and in 1891, 8,809.

MILNGAVIE (popularly called Milgav) is a thriving manufacturing burgh, in the parish of New Kilpatrick, 12 miles E. from Dumbarton, 5 N.E. from Duntocher, 21 S.W. from Stirling, 7 N. from Glasgow, 31 W. from Edinburgh, and 2 N.E. from New Kilpatrick. In the village is a paper mill, and in the neighbourhood are two bleach fields, a dye works, and a distillery. Here are Established and United Presbyterian churches, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Mission room belonging to the Episcopal church. The country round is finely diversified with hill and dale, and ornamented with many family mansions. Population returned with the parish.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE.

THIS is a large and important shire in the south of Scotland, bounded on the east by the counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk, on the north-west by Ayrshire, on the south-west by the stewartry (or county) of Kirkcudbright, and on the north by the counties of Lanark, Peebles, and part of Selkirk; its south and south-eastern boundary is washed by the Solway Firth, and its south-eastern base is skirted by Roxburgh-shire and the English county of Cumberland. The length of the county, from north-west to south-east, is nearly fifty-five miles, and its extreme breadth, from the south to where it touches Peebles-shire on the north, is nearly thirty miles. According to the latest and best surveys, it embraces an area of 1,062 square miles, or 680,317 acres of land. In size Dumfries is classed as the eighth and in population as the fourteenth Scotch county.

EARLY HISTORY.—At the epoch of the Roman invasion under Agricola, in the year 80, this part of Scotland was inhabited by a race called the Selgove, who spread themselves as far as the banks of the river Dee, in Galloway. These people continued independent till the year 875, when they were overpowered by the Northumbrian Saxons, who retained the ascendancy for two centuries. During the lapse of this time, however, immense swarms of adventurers from Ireland and Cantire effected a settlement, and from these intermixtures sprung the Picts, who progressively acquired the paramount sway. At this period Dumfries-shire is understood to have formed part of Cumbria, which district Edgar bequeathed to his youngest brother, David, who encouraged the cupidity of many opulent Anglo-Norman barons, and the county was then divided into extensive baronies. The almost interminable border warfare was a frightful calamity to the inhabitants of Dumfries-shire and Cumberland, who for centuries were subjected to all the horrors attendant upon barbarous incursions and reckless feudal hostility. When the civil war broke out under Charles I., the common people entered heartily into the covenant, and the shire was disturbed by the exertions made by loyal noblemen and gentlemen in quelling the insurrection. Attachment to the house of Stuart ruined several of the great families; and humbler causes have conspired to extinguish many names of great local interest. The Mixwells were completely ruined by the attainder of the Earl of Nithsdale, in 1715. The Douglasses of Queensberry and the Johnstons of Annandale have merged in other families, and out of the general wreck the noble house of Buccleuch has risen to the greatest prosperity and influence of any family in the south of Scotland. From being thus so frequently subjected to the horrors of early invasion and predatory warfare, and being so partitioned into baronies, the shire exhibits, even to this day, the remains of some very important castles and places of security.

SOIL AND SURFACE, PRODUCE, MANUFACTURES, &c.—The lower parts of Dumfries-shire are based with brown, red, yellow or white sandstone, with dip generally to the Solway; a considerable body of limestone also lies in this quarter, and beds of ironstone are occasionally found to accompany the other strata. Coal prevails in great plenty in the upper portions of Nithsdale and lower parts of Eskdale, the two extreme points of the county. The lime-stone of the shire has been of great value in improving the land; marl likewise abounds in various tracts, and of freestone and whinstone there is a sufficiency in all directions; marble is also procured for different useful and ornamental purposes, and near the northern confines of the county, at Wanlockhead, there are inexhaustible mines of lead. As in most districts in the south of Scotland, there is a general mixture of arable and pasture land. The soil is of great variety, that in the south being a light covering over a rocky and gravelly subsoil, producing thin crops; but in the north, where the subsoil is peaty, vegetation is rank. This county is famed for agriculture, its capacities in this respect being highly developed. The land is well tilled and drained, strongly fenced, and produces good crops of oats, potatoes, turnips and hay. About 216,180 acres are under cultivation. Though changeable and moist, the climate is upon the whole mild and salubrious.

The following are the principal eminences in Dumfries-shire, with their altitude above the level of the sea :—

IN NITHSDALE DISTRICT.		IN ANNANDALE DISTRICT.		IN ESKDALE DISTRICT.

In Annandale the improvement in the breed of cattle has been most apparent; at the Highland Society's meeting some of the choicest specimens of the pure breed of Galloway cows, heifers and bullocks are exhibited. The number of oxen, sheep and pigs nurtured in this county is invariably more than adequate to the demands of its population; and exportation, therefore, of the excess product takes place; and the same may be observed of corn, wool, hides, and skins. The condition of the county is represented as having greatly improved within the last sixty years, and at present its affairs may be considered in as prosperous a state as those of any other district of Scotland. Dumfries-shire cannot be ranked as a manufacturing county; the principal branches under this head are the manufacture of hosiery goods and tweeds, the chief seat of these being its capital. There are also distilleries, agricultural implement works, dyeworks, tanneries, &c. This county is also noted for bacon curing, a large number of carcasses of pork being cured annually.

RIVERS, &c.—The chief, indeed the only, rivers of consequence are the Nith, the Annan, and the Esk. From these streams the principal divisions of the county obtain their names; from each of these greater divisions diverge vales, which likewise have denominations taken from the water that are poured through them, such as Moffatdale, Dryfesdale, and Ewesdale. The Nith, sixty miles in length, rises in the eastern hills of Ayrshire, enters Nithsdale by the foot of Carsonec hill, in the parish of Kirkcudbright, and descends into the vale of Sangaular; having forced its way through the hills which surround this vale, it receives the Crawick water from the north, and the Euchar from the south. The river Cairn, which forms the western boundary of the county, unites its stream with the Nith a little above Dumfries, a short distance so upward in which the latter river empties itself into the Solway Firth. Near to Jarborough Castle, on the banks of the river Cairn, are to be seen those earthen mounds called "Bow-bunts," where the barons of Glencairn, with their vassals, used to practice archery. The river Annan, the length of which is forty miles, takes its rise in the mountains above Moffat, and runs through the flat part of Annandale for upwards of twenty-three miles; in its course it receives the Evan and the Moffat waters, and the Wamphrey stream, which irrigates a pleasant valley of that name. Passing Johnstone, some other tributary rivulets increase its volume; at Lochmaben it is enlarged by the Ae, and a little lower by the Dryfe, which courses through the vale of Dryfesdale, considered the termination of the vale of Annan. The higher part of Eskdale, for nearly twenty miles, is mountainous. The Esk, in its progress through the district, is joined by the Black Esk, the Maggot, the Ewes, and the Wanchope. After reaching Broomholm the river traverses a flat country, and a part of Cumberland, before it reaches the Solway Firth; during this portion of its course it receives the Liddal from Roxburgh-shire, and the Linc water from the county of Cumberland; its entire length is about forty-three miles, thirty of which are in the shire of Dumfries. The Solway differs very materially from other estuaries receiving in Scotland the appellation of "Firths;" its waters are shallow, and have long, sandy reaches at the ebbing of the tide. The ebbs and flows of the Solway are proverbial for the rapidity of their action, and that is particularly the case during the spring tides and the prevalence of gales from the south-west, and borderers, though well mounted, have, in numerous melancholy instances, been overwhelmed and drowned when returning from the Cumberland fairs, in crossing the bed of this estuary—even the most experienced persons being liable to be overtaken by the tides when they have the best expectation of fording it in safety. The principal lines of RAILWAY now in operation are the Glasgow and South-Western and the Caledonian, with their branches.

DIVISIONS, REPRESENTATION, &c.—The whole county is now popularly apportioned into three districts, namely—ESKDALE on the east, almost the whole of which belongs to the noble family of Buccleuch; ANNANDALE in the middle, and NITHSDALE on the west. It is ascertained that Dumfries-shire was placed under the government of a sheriff in the thirteenth century, at which period it included the stewartry of Kirkcudbright. The district of Annandale, however, continued to be a stewartry from the period when it merged in the Crown by the accession of Bruce, till the abolition of the heritable jurisdiction. Up to the era of the Reformation, Dumfries-shire formed part of the extensive diocese of Glasgow, and was divided into the two deaneries of Nithsdale and Annandale; it now possesses forty-four parishes, which are divided into five parishes and one synod. There are four royal burghs in the county—Dumfries, Annan, Sanquhar, and Locmaben; and six burghs of barony—Moffat, Lockerbie, Langholm, Ecclefechan, Thornhill, and Moniaive. The shire a large sends one member to Parliament, and the royal burghs before named join with Kirkcudbright in returning another representative. The present member for the county is Sir Robert Jardine, Bart., of Castlehill. The parliamentary constituency for 1891-2 numbered 9,229. The lord lieutenant is the Duke of Buccleuch, K.T. According to the census returns for 1881, the population of the county was 76,140, and by those for 1891, 74,308. The valuation of the shire was in 1891-2, including royal and parliamentary burghs but exclusive of railways, £541,162, and of railways, £69,669.

ANNAN,

BRYDEKIRK, DORNOCK, LOWTHERTOWN, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

ANNAN, the capital of the district of Annandale and of its parish, is an ancient royal burgh, 79 miles S. of Edinburgh, 87 S.E. of Glasgow, 48 N.E. of Kirkcudbright, 27 S. of Moffat, 16 S.E. of Dumfries, and 6 from Ecclefechan, situated on the east or left bank of the river Annan, rather more than a mile above its influx into the Solway Firth, and upon the Glasgow and South-Western and Caledonian railways, the latter being in connection with the Solway line, on both of which there are stations. The name is derived from that of the river, whose appellation is traced to the Celtic word An, signifying simply water. It is a town of considerable antiquity, and is one of the most ancient burghs in Scotland. Annan was a Roman station, and the Veromum of the geography of Ravenna. It seems to have been held by the Britons after the departure of the Romans till they were subdued by the Saxons of the Northumbrian kingdom, when it came to the Scotch. It afterwards became a principal port, and was granted, with the territory of Annandale and the port of Lochmaben, to the ancestors of Robert Bruce, by some of whom a castle was erected, which was once occupied as a church, but afterwards went to ruin, and the original wall formed part of the gail and the old town hall. Upon the death of David II., in 1371, this castle (Lochmaben) and the lordship of Annandale came to Thomas Randolph, Earl of Murray, and went with his sister Agnes to the Dumbars, Earls of March; after their forfeiture it went to the Douglases, who lost it by similar conduct; and then, having come to Alexander, Duke of Albany, he, for rebellion against his brother King James III., and plundering the fair of Lochmaben, in 1484, also forfeited it. Since that period it continued in the hands of the King, and became the great key to the western border. By the accession of the Bruce family to the throne it became a royal burgh. The existing charter was granted by James VI. of Scotland, and is dated July 10th, 1612; it confirms previous charters, and particularly recites one conferred by James V., dated 1st March, 1598, which stated that Annan had with other towns been burned and destroyed by sieges and the inroads of the English, particularly in 1298, when they entered Annandale and burned the town with its churches. The burgh is governed by a provost, three bailies, and fifteen councillors, a treasurer, a dean of guild, and town clerk. It unites with Dumfries, Saughahar, Lochmaben, and Kirkcubright in returning one member to Parliament, the present representative being R. T. Reid, Esq., Q.C. The port or harbour of Annan is free, and vessels of 250 tons can come within half a mile of the town, but vessels of much larger burthen can enter the river at its confluence with the Solway, distant little more than a mile from the town; at this place are wooden wharves or jetties. Among the branches of trade are those of bacon curing, bone grinding, and corn milling, these works giving employment to a large number of hands; there is also a distillery situated about a mile north of the town. In 1879 a working men's reading and recreation room and temperance coffee palace was opened by the Marchioness of Queensberry, who was also the promoter. Branches of the Commercial Bank of Scotland, Limited, the British Linen Company, and the Bank of Scotland, are settled here; there is also a bank for savings. Limestone and freestone are abundant in many parts of the parish, and large quarries are worked at Corsehill, &c., for home trade and shipment, the lessees of which are Messrs. J. & A. Murray. Palmer's Nurseries, now of world-wide repute, are situated just outside the town, and cover a very extensive area. Annan of late years has been much improved by new streets and buildings, and now possesses a very handsome town hall, built on the site of the old one in High street, at a cost of upwards of £4,000. The old bridge, consisting of five arches, was removed in 1826, and a neat and substantial one erected on its site, towards which a grant of £3,000 was obtained from Government, and the remainder supplied by the county. On the west are the town hall and market place, and at the east end of the town is the fine parish church built of stone, with a tower and spire. A Free church, United Presbyterian, Episcopal, Independent, and Roman Catholic chapels are the other places of worship. The principal educational establishment is a classical academy, which was erected in 1820.

The Education Board have recently decided to build a new public school at a cost of £1,000, to meet the growth of the population. In it will be taught most of the elements and all the useful branches of education, and the preceptors will consist of classical and other masters, and teachers in the several branches. Annan is proud of being the birthplace of the Rev. Edward Irving, founder of that sect of Christians called Irvingites, and of Hugh Clapperton, the African traveller. The town is now plentifully supplied with water. The reservoir in which the water for the use of the town is stored is situated on the farm of Purdumstown, in the parish of Middlebie, about 7½ miles from Annan. It has a capacity of holding 27,000,000 gallons. The filter bed and supply tank is in the land between the two reservoirs, and is able to pass 150,000 gallons per day. The ceremony of opening the waterworks was performed by Lord Augustus Noel, wife of Ernest Noel, Esq., then M.P. for the Dumfries district, on July 21st, 1881. The total cost was about £12,000. Messrs. Barber & Fleming, Edinburgh, were the contractors.

An excellent newspaper, the Annandale Observer, is published every Friday, of which Messrs. William Cuthbertson & Son, High street, are the proprietors. The market is held on Friday, and at the two cattle marts large quantities of stock are sold. Fairs are held on the first Friday in May, the first Friday in August, and the third Friday in October. The acreage of the parish is 19,915. Population of the town in 1881, 4,943, and in 1891, 5,295.

BRYDEKIRK is a village, 3 miles N. of Annan, situated on the west bank of the Annan river. The proprietor was the late Mrs. General Dinn, through whose interest it was erected into a quoad sacra parish in May, 1836, and the same lady built the church in 1835. The remains of Brydekirk are in this parish. Population in 1881, 702, and in 1891, 750.

DORNOCK is a parish and village—the latter a small one, in the district of Annandale, 84 miles S. of Edinburgh, 18 S. of Langholm, 17 S.E. of Dumfries, 12 S.E. of Lockerbie, 7 S. of Ecclefechan, and 2½ E. of Annan; situated on the high road from the latter town to Caerlisle, and about a quarter of a mile from the shore of the Solway Firth, where there is a good sea bathing. The parish, which is about two miles and a half square, contains about 4,626 acres, and is washed on its southern part by the Solway. An ancient ecclesiastical, called Stapleton Tower, stands on the estate of Stapleton, in this parish. It is now the summer residence of John A. C. Hiley, Esq. Robbitt Tower, formerly belonging to the Irvings, of Robbitt, stands in the same parish, and with the lands attached are now possessed by Robert Paterson, Esq. At a short distance from the village there are the remains of a Roman military road and Druidical circle, or temple. On what was formerly a moor in the parish, a battle is traditionally said to have been fought between the English and Scotch, in which the former were defeated and their two commanders slain. Two stones in Dornock churchyard, each 6½ feet long and two broad, and raised in the middle like a coffin, mark the place of their reported interment. On these tombs hieroglyphics are cut, which have hitherto puzzled the antiquarian. The kirk and the parochial school are in the village. Besides an Established church there are two parochial schools in the parish. The population of the parish was in 1881, 814, and in 1891, 810.

CAERLAVEROCK PARISH.

INCLUDING THE VILLAGES OF BANKEND, KELTON, GLENCAPLE QUAY, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

THE parish of CAERLAVEROCK occupies a sort of peninsula formed by the Solway Firth, the river Nith, and Lochar water. The magnificent ruin of Caerlaverock Castle stands on a level plain, between eight and nine miles from Dumfries. It is an ancient possession of the Maxwells, once a powerful family in this part of Scotland, and wardens of the western Marches. It was besieged and captured by Edward I. in 1300, and by Cromwell in 1651. After this it ceased to be a tenable fortress, and fell into decay. It now presents a ruin massive and picturesque, eminently worthy the notice of the tourist. Lord Herries is the owner of nearly the whole parish. Kirkconnell Lea is the residence of Sir James Anderson, Knight, who commanded the "Great Eastern" when she successfully recovered the lost ends of the Atlantic cable. The places of worship comprise two churches—the parish church, situated near Bankend, and one of the Free Church, at Glencaple Quay. There are two public schools in the parish. The population of Caerlaverock parish was in 1881, 1,051, and in 1891, 916.

BANKEND is a clean, pleasant village, in the above parish, about 7 miles S.E. from Dumfries, containing a public school.

GLENCAPLE QUAY, on the banks of the Nith, in this parish, and about 5½ miles S. from Dumfries, is a clean, neat little village, where in former time, numbers of coasting traders discharged and took in their cargoes for various parts of the United Kingdom, and passengers from Liverpool usually landed here. It is now chiefly used as a bathing place, to which it is extensively resorted in summer time. There is a public school here. KELTON is likewise a small seaport village on the Nith, about 4 miles S. from Dumfries, which is the nearest railway station for all the above places.

DUMFRIES is the nearest Railway Station, between seven and eight miles from Caerlaverock

CONVEYANCE BY ROAD.

Waggonettes leave Glencaple Quay for Dumfries every day, during winter months, at 9.45 a.m., and during summer months at 8.45, 11 and 12 a.m. and 3 and 5 p.m.

DUMFRIES,

MAXWELLTOWN, TERREGLES, TROQUEER, AND NEIGHBOURHOODS.

DUMFRIES, the capital of its county and parish, a royal burgh, the seat of the synod and presbytery of Dumfries, is 338 miles from London (by the route of Manchester), 71 s. of Edinburgh, 72 s.e. of Glasgow, 180 s. by w. of Aberdeen, 60 s.e. of Ayr, 32 n.w. of Carlisle (by railway), 15 n.w. of Annan, and 8 s.w. of Lochmaben. It is situated on the Glasgow and South-Western Railway, the station of which forms a most important junction, connecting the M'laud system from Glasgow to London, also the Caledonian main line at Lockerbie for Glasgow, Edinburgh, and the north of Scotland, and likewise the London and North-Western for London. It also forms the junction with the Castle Douglas, Newton Stewart, and Stranraer Railways for the north of Ireland, along which the mails are carried in connection with the mail steamers from Stranraer to Larne, and are despatched thence by rail to Belfast twice daily. At the goods station of the G. & S.W. Railway important storage accommodation is provided for the merchants, and there is also a bonded store for spirits, &c., supervised by the excise officers. Dumfries, which may be considered as the metropolis of the south-west quarter of Scotland, is seated on the left bank of the river Nith, about nine miles above its confluence with the Solway Firth, and is navigable for vessels of light tonnage, the tide flowing as high as the old bridge. There exists no record whereby to ascertain the date when the town was founded, or the etymology of its name. Drium-a-frish—Dumfries—Drumfries and "Dumfrie," have successively been its appellation—Dun a castle, and frish, shrub, is a plausible compound for the original name. Under whatever circumstances Dumfries was founded, it was undoubtedly a place of considerable size long before the days of William the Lion, and in his reign it was erected into a royal burgh. The site of this Queen of Nithdale is singularly picturesque, stretching along the bank of the Nith, at an elevation sufficient to command a rich prospect terminating at the distance of a few miles in a chain of lofty hills, either cultivated or umbrageous to their summits. There are so many attractions in and around Dumfries that the gentry of the neighbouring counties resort to it, imparting vivacity and all the delights of good society. The ancient monastery of Greyfriars, in this town, was the scene of a remarkable tragedy about the middle of the fourteenth century; this event was connected with the assassination of the Red Comyn (a powerful chief in who formerly held the regency of Scotland) by Robert the Bruce, attended by Kirkpatrick and Lindsay, two of Bruce's adherents.

A fine Doric column raised by the county of Dumfries to the memory of Charles, Duke of Queensberry, who died in 1778, adorns the centre of the burgh. A very handsome statue of the poet Burns has been placed in Church place, close to Greyfriars church, which was unveiled by Lord Rosbery on the 6th April, 1882, amid great rejoicings. The figure, which is cut in Sicilian marble, and was executed at Carrara, from a model designed and prepared by Mrs. D. O. Hill, is represented in a position between sitting and standing, the head being slightly turned towards the right shoulder. A daisy is held between the finger and thumb of the left hand, the right hand being bidden beneath the folds of a shepherd's plaid, which is carelessly thrown over the shoulder. The statue, the cost of which was defrayed by subscription, is placed on a plain pedestal of dark grey granite, at a height of about nine feet from the ground. The Court house and county buildings are large, elegant erections, in Buccleuch street. The old gaol, which stood close to the Court House, has been removed, and a new one erected in Maxwelltown for the joint use of Dumfries-shire, Kirkcudbrightshire and Wigtonshire. The building, which is large and handsome, was opened August 15th, 1883. Messrs. J. Crackstone & Son, Dumfries, were the contractors. On the site of the old gaol, in Buccleuch street, a new post office was completed and opened for business in the early part of 1889. It is of the celebrated Dumfries-shire red stone, from designs supplied by the architect to H.M. postal authorities, Edinburgh. Adjoining it, also on the site of the old prison, a fine hall, with accommodation for 700 persons, having shops in front, has been erected by the congregation of Free St. George's church. There is on an elevated site an infirmary, a noble and spacious building, which is an ornament to the town. Circuit courts of justice are held in April and September for Dumfries-shire and the stewartry of Kirkcudbright and Wigtonshire; there are also ordinary and small debt, sheriff's and justice's burgh courts. The Theatre is a neat building of stone, with a projecting portico; the interior is tastefully decorated. It was here that Keen first emerged from obscurity to fame, and he never forgot the early patronage of the denizens of Dumfries.

The principal imports are timber, coal, slate, iron and wine; the exports consist of wheat, barley, oats, potatoes, wool and freestone, the latter being worked at Lochbarrigs, three miles distant from the town. The manufacture of woollen thread is very extensively carried on here, and next in importance is the iron trade, the Dumfries Iron Works, of which M'Kinneil and Co. are proprietors, being one of the largest structures of its kind in the south of Scotland. The making of agricultural implements is the staple trade of these works, although steam boilers, railway contractors' wagon wheels, cranes, &c., are only a few among other articles manufactured. Considerable business is also done in the hosiery trade, blewing, tanning, the manufacture of glass, &c. Dumfries was for many years the leading market for hareskins in Scotland, and even regulated the price of home fur in England; and it is still looked to as the arbiter of prices. Several branch banking companies afford facilities for the monetary transactions of the town. The principal hotels are the King's Arms, The Commercial, the Station, the Queensberry, and lastly the Globe, where the famous bard, Burns, spent many of his leisure hours, and many relics of him are to be seen at this hotel, which was, and is still, called Burns' Houff. Two newspapers are issued weekly, viz.:—the Dumfries and Galloway Courier and Herald, and the Dumfries and Galloway Standard, both of which are excellent papers, and have a very large circulation.

The municipal government of the burgh is vested in a provost, three bailies, a dean of guild, a treasurer, a town clerk, and nineteen councillors. The craftsmen were formerly divided into seven corporations, with each a deacon chosen from their respective trades, who elected one of their own number to be convener, and another to be general box-master, and of whom formed what was termed a grand committee of the seven trades; these distinctions, however (for distinctions of considerable importance: they were in former times), were virtually abolished by the Reform Bill; some of the trades possessed considerable property, which has since been publicly sold, and the proceeds equitably divided among the respective parties. Dumfries unites with Annan, Lochmaben, Sanguhar, and Kirkcudbright, in returning one member to Parliament. The present member is Robert T. Reid, Esq. q.c. The numerous nursery grounds around the town are both useful and ornamental to the suburbs. The great desideratum of a copious supply of pure water has been attained, and the inhabitants have an abundance brought from ample sources about five miles from the town.

The places of worship, including Maxwelltown, comprise five churches of the Establishment, four of the Free Church, three United Presbyterian, an Episcopal, a Congregational, a Wesleyan, a Baptist, a Catholic Apostolic, and Roman Catholic Cathedral. The latter is a very large and handsome edifice, situated in Shakespeare street, and has

schools in connection. St. Michael's, or the mother church, claims peculiar notice on account of its cemetery, which contains numerous elegant and curious monuments. The most attractive is the fine mausoleum raised to the memory of the Scottish bard, Burns; the design for the mausoleum was by F. Hunt, Esq., of London, an Turnerelli modelled the sculpture. By the erection of this monument, it may be said that Scotland has repaid the debt so long due to the memory of him of whose natural genius his countrymen may well be proud. Burns died at Dumfries on the 21st July, 1796, aged 37 years, and his remains were deposited in the church yard of St. Michael. On January 25th, 1859, the centenary of the birth of the great Scotch poet, a series of banquets, entertainments, &c. was held in Edinburgh, Glasgow, and in this as well as most other towns both in Scotland and England; poems were written in his honour, and at the Crista Palace, Sydney, where a grand festival took place, a prize poem being the best of 700 sent for approval) was recited. The last surviving son of the great poet—who had reached the mature age of 81—was interred in the same vault as his father on Feb. 28th, 1872. This churchyard has been used as a place of burial for more than seven hundred years, and contains not a few monuments that are fit to attract attention, on account of their age as well as for other reasons. Conspicuous may be noticed the round monument of Provost Corsane, who had worn the badges of his authority, as chief magistrate, bailie, and common councillor for forty-five years; also the magnificent tomb of Francis Irving, who was M.P. for the burgh in 1617. Near the gate lies the duft of Baillie Paterson, to whom the Dumfries Academy is indebted for its educational endowments. In an enclosure, surrounded by iron rails, we read: "In this cemetery and chiefly within this enclosure, lie the mortal remains of more than 420 inhabitants of Dumfries, who were suddenly swept away by the memorable invasion of Asiatic cholera, A.D. 1832. That terrible pestilence entered the town on the 15th September, and remained till 27th November, during which time it seized at least 900 individuals, of whom 44 died in one day, and no more than 415 were reported recovered. That the benefit of this solemn warning might not be lost to posterity, this monument was erected from collections made in several churches in this town." The tombstones of William Grierson, William Welch, and James Kirk, the three parties who suffered death on the Whit-ribs—the two former on January 2nd, 1667, and the latter June, 1685—are to be seen in the churchyard. Towering high above these lowly tombstones stands a pyramid of granite, erected in 1834 to show the reverence which is cherished in modern times for the dead and the rest of the noble army of the Nithsdale martyrs. The mausoleum and the profusion of funeral sculpture which adorn the cemetery are very attractive, and many thousands of strangers from all parts of the world visit the grave of the poet every year. The graceful church of St. Mary, on the north side of English street, is a graceful ornament to this approach of the town, and the cemetery around it is gradually being enriched with finely executed monumental sculpture. St. John's Episcopal church is a fine Gothic building with tower and spire 120 feet high built from a design by Mr. W. Slater and Mr. R. H. Carpenter, Regent Street, London, the foundation stone of which was laid in August, 1867; it is in full communion with the Scottish Episcopal church. There has recently been erected, from design by Mr. A. B. Crombie, architect, Dumfries, in Newhall terrace, close to the station, a large and commodious drill hall, with a sitting accommodation for 3,000 people, which forms the headquarters for the Dumfries-shire Battalion of Rifle Volunteers.

CHARITABLE, EDUCATIONAL, AND SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTIONS.—The Infirmary was founded in 1776, at a period when very few charities of a similar nature were in Britain; and this is still the only one in the South of Scotland. Medical advice and medicine are gratuitously afforded to every applicant who is an object of charity. It is supported by annual subscriptions, legacies, donations, benefactions, &c., and is under the management of governors. There is also the Crichton Royal Institution, endowed by the late James Crichton, Esq., of Friar's Close, and incorporated by Act of Parliament, dated 3rd July, 1840, as a hospital for the insane and a home for mental and nervous invalids of the higher and middle classes. The grounds, 300 acres in extent, are pleasantly situated on an elevation overlooking the valley of the Nith, and have a south-western aspect and an extensive prospect unobscured in the South of Scotland for variety and beauty, affording scope for extended exercise and recreation. A large building within the grounds, called the second House of the Institution, is devoted chiefly to the care and treatment of the pauper lunatics of the district; the number of patients accommodated being about 550. Moorhead's Hospital is for the purpose of supporting aged and indigent poor. It is governed by a body of directors elected from the magistrates, town council, &c., and is supported by numerous benefactions, donations and annual subscriptions. It was founded in 1753, by the Messrs. J. & W. Moorhead, merchants. Dumfries is not behind other towns in its support of numerous religious and educational societies, an industrial school is among the latter institutions, providing accommodation for 120 boys who are sent to it from many parts of Scotland; the school is under most efficient management, and the boys are taught shoemaking, tailoring, net-making, &c. They have a most efficient pipe band which is known throughout Scotland, and is often engaged to play in the large centres, thereby causing considerable revenue to the school. The commodious cottages or almshouses founded by the benevolence of Mrs. Crichton are an interesting memorial of her philanthropy, and the cottages erected recently by the trustees of the late David Johnstone, solicitor, are among the finest and best endowed institutions of the kind in Scotland. The support of ladies who have been reduced from comparative affluence to a position to require assistance. The Dumfries Academy, established under its present designation in 1802, with a complete staff of masters, superseded two institutions—the Grammar school and the Commercial school, which till then existed in separate parts of the town. The date of the foundation of these schools is unknown, but mention is made of the Grammar school in the session clerk's records for 1688. In 1722 the masters in both schools were endowed by Baillie Paterson, of Dumfries, who bequeathed 15,000 merks to the magistrates and ministers of Dumfries for the benefit of the teachers; and in the following year by John Raining, of Norwich, to the extent of £500. The Beil bequest of £100 was left in 1789, the interest of which is given to the English master. The present commodious structure was built mainly by private subscription. For a few years the subscribers took a share in the management of the academy, but in 1814 it was handed over to the town council under whose patronage it flourished till August, 1872, when, by the Education Act, it was transferred as one of the higher class public schools to the management of the Dumfries Burgh School Board.

The County Club, in Assembly street, was formerly the old Assembly rooms, but is now in the possession of the Dumfries and Galloway Club. The Dumfries and Maxwelltown Observatory Society have erected on Corberry Hill, on the Maxwelltown side of the river, an observatory, which is regarded as a highly ornamental feature is one of the most unique half-urban, half-rustic landscapes, and commands an extensive view of beautiful and varied scenery; the cost, which exceeded one thousand guineas, was raised in £5 shares. The plans were by Mr. Newall, architect, and the building was completed in little more than twelve months. It contains four stories—the lower one for the use of the keeper, three others for the accommodation of subscribers and strangers, which are furnished with globe, mathematical instruments, newspapers and periodicals; and the upper storey is set apart for a camera obscura and prism. The grounds, which consist of more than half an acre, are laid out with much taste, and planted with flowers and shrubs of various kinds.

The market day is Wednesday. The two principal half-yearly markets take the name of the Candlemas and Road Fairs. Besides the usual commodities that chance hands at these periods, many thousands of head of cattle are bought and sold, and vast quantities of pork also find purchasers in Dumfries from the beginning of December to the end of February. The fairs are held on the first Wednesday in February, the third Wednesday in March, the third Wednesday in April, the 28th May or the Wednesday after; the third Wednesday in June, the third Wednesday in July, the third Wednesday in August, the third Wednesday in October, and the third Wednesday in November, for cattle (all old style). There are three auction marts for the sale of cattle, sheep, &c., through which pass very large quantities of stock every week, and are frequented by dealers from all parts of England and Scotland, Dumfries being the centre of a large agricultural district. The parish of Dumfries embraces an area of 10,032 statute acres, and in 1881 had a population of 16,836, and in 1891, 17,861, the royal burgh at the last named period numbering 17,804. The population of the burghs of Dumfries and Maxwelltown combined at the same time contained 22,822, and the combined parishes of Dumfries and Troqueer (which include the burgh of Maxwelltown), 23,748.

MAXWELLTOWN, formerly a village, in the parish of Troqueer, is now a burgh of barony, in the stewartry of Kirkcubright, and connected with Dumfries by three bridges across the Nith. In no instance has the good effects of erecting a village into a burgh of barony been more conspicuous than in Maxwelltown. The charter was obtained from the Crown in 1810, and since that time, from being a poor village notorious for disorderly conduct, it has improved in value and extent of houses, and increased considerably in the number and respectability of its inhabitants; it is governed by a provost, two bailies, and councillors. Among the trading establishments are two saw mills, two tweed factories, the large dyeworks of Messrs. T. Shortridge and Son, and several good shops. The church here are handsome and of modern erection. About a mile along the Maxwelltown bank of the Nith, are situated the ruins of Lincluden Abbey. This ecclesiastical structure was built about the middle of the twelfth century, by Uchtred, Lord of Galloway, as a convent for Benedictine nuns. In this capacity it continued till about the close of the fourteenth century, when it was suppressed by Archbishop the Grim, Earl of Douglas, on account, it is alleged, of the irregularities of the inmates, and converted by him into a collateral church for the numerous dependants of his family while they remained lords of Galloway. It existed as a college for behoof of a provost and twelve benefices till the Reformation, when Mr. Robert Douglas, an illegitimate son of Sir Robert Douglas, of Drumlanrig, who was provost of Lincluden when that great change occurred, continued to enjoy the benefice for forty years afterwards. Eventually the lands attached were converted into a temporal lordship and bestowed upon the family of Nithsdale. Afterwards the college became the property of the Nithsdale family, and here Lord Maxwell, in defiance of a Government edict, caused mass to be celebrated soon after the Reformation, on the 24th December, 1585, and, as it has been said, "the choral swell with which the venerable walls rang on that occasion was as the dying requiem of the ancient faith," mass never having been since said or sung in the house of Uchtred. In later days it was a favourite resort of the poet Burns, and while using beside its ruined walls he composed several of his pieces, the "Vision of Liberty" among the number. The population of the burgh in 1681 was 4,567, and in 1891, 4,861.

TROQUEER is a parish in the stewartry of Kirkcubright, lying on the river Nith, near its mouth, and opposite to Dumfries. It is bounded by Nithreggs on the North, Lochbruton on the west, and New Abbey on the south, extending about seven miles and a half in length, and four and a half broad. The parish has an area of 11,675 statute acres, and in 1881 contained a population of 5,524, and in 1891, 5,887. TERREGLES is also a parish situated near to Dumfries, but in the county of Kirkcubright. Population in 1881, 471, and in 1891, 474.

DUNSCORE,

AULDGIRTH, HOLYWOOD, KIRKMAHOE AND IRONGRAY (KIRKCUDBRIGHTSHIRE.)

DUNSCORE, a parish in the district of Nithsdale, is bounded by Glencairn and Keir on the north, and Holywood and Kirkcudbrightshire on the south; it is 12 miles in length, and its breadth varies from 1 to 4 miles, and contains about 14,815 acres. The hills which surround it are healthy and good for pasture. The celebrated John Welsh, son-in-law to John Knox, was a native of Dunscore. The land is arable on the banks of the Nith, which irrigates its eastern part; it is also intersected by the Cairn. Sheep and cattle are reared off these lands for the southern markets; and oats, barley, wheat, potatoes and turnips are sown in great quantities. The village is about 9 miles N.W. from Dumfries, and 7 a.s. from Moniaive. The places of worship are the parish church, a Free church, and a United Presbyterian church. Robert Burns at one time held a farm in this parish, near the Nith, named Ellieland, and it was while here that he had an opportunity of eulogising the Clouden river, which is a continuation of the Cairn water. At this period he took charge of a village library, instituted by his landlord, Robert Riddell, Esq. Auldgrith is the nearest railway station, 4 miles distant. Population in 1881, 1,405, and in 1891, 1,360.

AULDGIRTH is a small hamlet in the parish of Closeburn, distant 8 miles N.W. from Dumfries and 6 s. from Thornhill. It is a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway, and the postal centre for the district.

HOLYWOOD is a village, in the parish of its name, and a station on the Glasgow and South Western railway, distant 8 1/2 miles S. from Dumfries. The parish, which is bounded by Dunscore on the north and west, extends for 10 miles along the right bank of the Nith, its breadth being from 2 to 3 miles, its acreage is about 8,805. The district derives its name from a sacred grove, to which, it is said, the Druids resorted to perform their rites. The temple of these pagans was succeeded by the cell of a hermit, which was subsequently taken into the house of monks, and from thence, at the beginning of the twelfth century, and the ruins of an old abbey in the churchyard are supposed to be the remains of that building. An Irish recluse, named Congal, seems to have been the founder, and he bequeathed both to the cell and the abbey the name of Decongal, signifying "the Oakwood of Congal." The church, a neat erection and much admired, stands in a most delightful part of the country, about three miles from Dumfries. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 1,878, and in 1891, 1,800.

IRONGRAY, one of the most picturesque parishes in the south of Scotland, is situated in the stewartry of Kirkcudbright (the village of SHAWHEAD being about 7 miles W. of Dumfries, which is the nearest railway station), and is bounded on the north by the river Cairn or Clouden, where it separates it from the parish of Holywood, in Dumfries-shire, on the east by Terregles, on the west by Kirkpatrick-Durham and Urr, and on the south by Lochmutton. Its surface is diversified and irregular, and its outline nearly triangular, its area comprising 19,878 acres. In the churchyard is a monument erected by Sir Walter Scott, to the memory of Helen Walker, the prototype of Jeanie Deans, the heroine of the "Heart of Midlothian," who was a native of this parish, and whose remains are interred here. The monument is of Craigleith sandstone, and is in the form of a sarcophagus. There is also a Free church. In 1881 the parish contained a population of 784.
